The AMERICAN HOME for September

I couldn't afford to start from scratch

SUPPOSE I should get rid of all this old furniture and start over," I said to Mr. Hart the day he came out from his furniture store to give me some decorating ideas for my living room.

Mr. Hart took a few minutes to study the situation. "I don't see why you'd have to do that."

"There are some things I'd hate to part with," I admitted. I was thinking about the Victorian chairs that mother gave us and the little marbletopped table that Jeff found in an antique shop. "It's the mixture of styles that worries me," explained. "Nothing goes with anything else."

'Don't worry about that," Mr. Hart smiled. "There are decorating tricks to make different furniture styles live together." He paused a moment. "I take it you do have some money to spend?"

I told him how much we could afford. Then Mr. Hart surprised me. He measured the room, did some quick figuring, and handed me a slip of paper. "There's the cost of the best investment you can make," he said, "a floor of Armstrong's Linoleum. It'll set your whole color scheme. If we'd use Armstrong's Jaspé Linoleum in a taupe color, we could paint three walls to match. For the fourth we could use an unusual new wallpaper that looks like a print collection."

Then he suggested painting the Victorian chair frames white and re-upholstering them in turquoise blue. He looked at the old piano. I winced but he kept smiling. "We can even make that fit in with a coat of paint and a drapery background."

"You do sell furniture, don't you?" I laughed.

"Oh, yes," he grinned. "You need end tables, some nice lamps . . . and I think your budget will even give you an ornamental black and gold eagle over the fireplace."

Mr. Hart was right about everything-particularly my Armstrong Floor. That lovely color really made the room-and it's the easiest floor in the house to keep clean.

Write for the "Decorator's Answer Book"—it's packed with thirty-two pages of full-color illustrations of beautiful rooms designed by the noted decorator, Hazel Dell Brown. There are decorating and remodeling ideas for every room whether your house is new or old. Slip 10¢ into an envelope right now (outside U.S.A., 40¢) and mail to Armstrong Cork Company, 5009 Pine Street, Lancaster, Pa.

You can mix furniture styles graciously. The old pieces of furniture that you accumulated through the years can be made to blend beautifully together. Here, old furniture, new upholstery, a few do-it-yourself ideas, and the handsome background of a new Armstrong's Linoleum Floor transformed mixed furniture styles into a unified group in this handsome living room. Rich in color and dignity, Armstrong's Linoleum makes an ideal starting point when planning any decorative scheme. This design is custom cut from Armstrong's Jaspé, Style No. 14. Like all Armstrong's Linoleum Floors, it's beautiful-and wonderfully easy to clean. Write for free room plan and list of furnishings.

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST

Better Than Any Other Way of Preventing Tooth Decay According to Published Reports!

Read July Reader's Digest for the results of "one of the most extensive, costly and practical experiments in dental history"! The toothpaste used in this research was Colgate Dental Cream. And read this, too: Two years' research showed brushing teeth right after eating with Colgate Dental Cream stopped tooth decay best! Better than any other home method of oral hygiene! Yes, the Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever reported in dentifrice history!

No Other Toothpaste or Powder Ammoniated or Not Offers Proof of Such Results!

Even more important, there were no new cavities whatever for more than 1 out of 3 who used Colgate Dental Cream correctly! Think of it! Not even one new cavity in two full years! No other dentifrice has proof of such results! No dentifrice can stop all tooth decay, or help cavities already started. But the Colgate way is the most effective way yet known to help your dentist prevent decay.

*Colgate Dental Cream was used exclusively in this scientific research.

How we retired with $200 a month

"CTRANGE, I remember it so Sclearly—and more than 20 years seem just a short while ago. For it's thanks to what happened Christmas afternoon in 1927 that we're living in California today, with our income guaranteed for life.

"That holiday afternoon we'd invited some people in, and as we waited, Dot and I sat by the living room fire reading. Christmas always made me kind of stop and take stock. And this year I was turning forty. I'm not getting any younger, I thought, as I leafed through a copy of The Literary Digest.

"For years we'd cherished a favorite dream, Dot and I. Someday I was going to retire. We'd sell the house and move to southern California. Get just a little place where we'd be out in the sun all year.

"But we'd stopped talking about it lately. For we hadn't banked much money. At almost forty, nearly half my working life was behind me. So I began to wonder that afternoon . . . must I just live and work and die . . . doing the same thing every day?

"It was what I was thinking, I suppose, that made me notice the page that said, 'You don't have to be rich to retire on an income.' There was, it said, a way for a salaried man to get a lifetime income and retire. The Plan was called the

With it, I could get a guaranteed income of $200 a month beginning when I reached 60. I needed only one thing-fifteen or twenty good earning years ahead. I cut out the coupon.

"Soon my mail brought a booklet telling about Phoenix Mutual Plans. I found one just right for me.

"Looking back, 1927 seems like yesterday. We saw the stock market crash, the depression and war. Again and again we were thankful for our Phoenix Mutual Plan.

"Well, Christmas 1947 rolled around-and we had a party. I was almost sixty and set to retire. Soon after, my first Phoenix Mutual check for $200 arrived. We sold our house and drove to California.

"We found just the little place here we had dreamed of. And month after month the postman hands us our paycheck. We're financially independent, and will be, for life."

This letter from Hawaii is to all of the Editors of The American Home because all of you work together to publish that wonderful magazine which has become a homemaker's Bible for me. I am rather new at the business of homemaking and, since I depend on the information I get from The American Home, I would like you to know how much I appreciate the proper training I am receiving with each issue. . . I use and file all the recipes and am happy to get new ideas on food preparation. Every issue is saved and articles indexed for future reference.

We have been in our new house for ten months now and are beginning to feel that it is really, truly home. We had to put in the lawn, the walks, a driveway, the flowers and shrubs, the trees, fence in the laundry area. and build a dog house for the Cocker Spaniel. I can assure you that many nights we poured over all our old issues of THE AMERICAN HOME. Although there is still a number of things we plan to do, we are happy with the results attained so far, and feel that all of you deserve an orchid lei (Hawaiian, of course) for the help and inspiration you have unknowingly given us. -MRS. R. G. DODS, HONOLULU, HAWAII

I saw your article entitled "We Paint a Lovely Legend" in the April issue, and as I am a collector of this "legend" in a small way, I thought you might be interested in the older and true version.

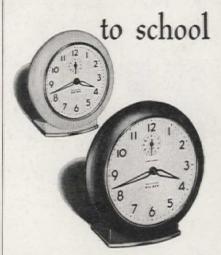

When the British and the Dutch occupied the Straits Settlements in Malaya, they attempted to surpress "The Triad Society," a secret organization of the Chinese. But they were most inconsistent as they allowed the Chinese porcelain known as "The Willow Pattern Plate" to exist and even manufactured and sold it throughout the world. The British were evidently unaware of the significance of the design. Thus the reason for the delusive love story, which fitted the design beautifully.

During the Eighteenth Century the Triads were strong throughout China and were making trouble for the Manchus. Anyone suspected of being a member was cruelly persecuted. So the Triads put on porcelain the traditional story of the founding of the society and circulated it throughout China as a reminder to the members of the noble beginnings and the original purpose of the society. Spies of the Manchus learned the meaning and ordered every plate with this design destroyed. If anyone was unfortunate enough to be found possessing one, he was beheaded.

As you well know, the design shows three figures on a bridge beneath a willow tree. These figures are three holy Buddhas, guards to "The City of Willows." The Buddhas are symbolic of the past, present, and future, and "The City of Willows" is Heaven. On the island representing Heaven, the pagoda is "The Red Flower Pavilion" where the Five Ancestors, originators of the society, rested after escaping from the Shao-Lin monastery in a boat. The peach tree above the pagoda symbolizes the tree under which the Three Brothers swore their oath, and it is upon this oath that the oath of the Triads is based. The fir and cypress trees remind the members of the Elder Brother Wan Yun-Lung by whose tomb grew a fir and cypress, placed in the design at the left of the bridge.

The burning building in the upper corner represents the burning of the monastery from which the five Ancestors escaped. The boat is a reminder of the one the monks used in their escape from Shao-Lin. It symbolizes the journey from death to immortality and by which they reach Heaven or "The Market Place of Universal Peace" in "The City of Willows." Here dead heroes, because of their virtuous lives and allegiance to the oath of the League, are turned into Doves of Peace.

"The City of Willows" had four gates and four walls surrounding it. The gates led to the East, West, South, and North. The scroll on the edge of the plate are reminders of the four gates.

This is but a scant history of the meaning of the Willow Pattern. If you would care to read the whole story, you will find it very dramatically told in the Swords of Silence, a story of Chinese secret societies, by Carl Glick and Hong Sheng-Hwa, published by Whittlesey House.

Often the Blue Willowware has a castle in the center of the plate. I have been told these are pictures of old castles in England. Perhaps this is the design that Thomas Minton originated instead of the "Willow Pattern Plate" for which he has been credited.

"This one is sure going up fast"

Building a home isn't a long drawn-out process any more. Houses seem to grow out of the ground in a few days. One big reason is that builders are using new materials that save construction time.

For example, Armstrong's Temlok® Sheathing, used on the house above, goes up much faster than ordinary wood sheathing. Labor costs are lower, and there's practically no waste of material. All this adds up to worth-while money-savings for you.

Temlok does more than cut your building cost. This valuable material gives the entire house greater strength and provides excellent insulation at the same time. Temlok is made of unusually strong pine fibers which are formed into tough, sturdy boards. Temlok's insulation value is over twice that of ordinary sheathing, which means extra comfort during both winter and summer, easier heating, and lower fuel bills.

You really owe it to yourself to find out all about Armstrong's Temlok Sheathing before you build or buy. Ask your local lumber dealer or contractor for the complete story about this modern building material that builds a better house at no extra cost.

WRITE FOR FREE BOOKLET, "How To Build A More Comfortable New Home." It's packed with ideas about building methods and materials, illustrated in color. Just write to the Armstrong Cork Company, Building Materials Division, 5009 Vine Street, Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

Neighbors in Berkley, Mass., know how to live and work together. Here, they swing their brushes to give the church a coat of paint

A pastor sees a dream come true

ERNEST K. THOMAS

Berkley, Mass., is a small New England town—with a list of some 700 registered voters—but what it lacks in size it makes up for in community spirit. At the heart of village life is the local Congregational church, and its story proves once again that neighbors will put their hearts into a project which will be of benefit to all. In this case, people of all creeds worked together to effect improvements in the church property, making a dream come true for the part-time pastor, Mr. Wayne Philbrick, and for every resident of Berkley.

Back in 1948, the Congregational church was faced with a serious problem. Under Mr. Philbrick's ministry, the congregation had grown by leaps and bounds, but finances had not taken a corresponding rise for the better. Actually, funds were low and the church property was in urgent need of repairs and additions.

In the spring, the elders of the church reported that the structure needed painting and that a new heating plant was essential if the meetinghouse was to be used through the winter. Unfortunately, there was no money to pay for these improvements.

At this point, when the financial outlook seemed most bleak, parttime pastor Philbrick came up with a suggestion—one destined to solve the fund-raising problem and result in a magic growth of neighborliness and co-operation throughout the town. Mr. Philbrick's happy idea called for the staging of an outdoor flower show in the fall, with a small admission fee of 25 cents to all comers.

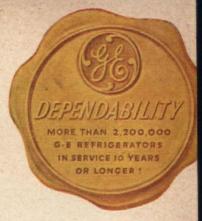

Mr. Philbrick tells how it all began. "For years I had been an enthusiastic gardener, specializing in growing hardy chrysanthemums," he narrates. "To make the show possible, I offered to supply rooted cuttings to all who would agree to grow them, dig up the plants in October, and bring them to the church grounds. Although several people expressed doubt as to their horticultural abilities, my offer met with a good response, and 800 plants were raised that first year."

Talk of the show spread, capturing the imagination of every resident of Berkley. Offers of help poured in from all sides—even from non-churchgoers and skeptics. The entire town fell under the spell of the growing plants, and strangers became friends as they worked together in a joyous spirit of co-operation to make the show a success.

The flower show took place in October and lasted for three perfect autumn days. The grounds of the church had been laid out in small

A Dream Come True (Begins on page 22)

Annual flower show brings out the town—at 25 cents per head. Profits of 1948 show bought new heating plant for the church gardens, and the 'mums, transplanted into paper pots and set in the earth, were beautiful to look at in their natural surroundings. To round out the affair, there were special displays—of hooked rugs, antiques, painted trays, old glass and china, ornamental gourds, and corsages. Throughout the event, the church organ played softly, encouraging visitors to relax and take pleasure in the scene.

The proceeds exceeded the most optimistic guesses hazarded by church members. As it turned out, 1,200 people attended the show, and net profits—from sales and admissions—amounted to some $650. The new heating plant was no longer a vision, but an assured fact.

The Berkley flower show has become an annual event, making possible many improvements for the Congregational church, and the community spirit which blossomed with the event has spread to many other projects. In the summer of 1949, a group of men, women, and children met on Saturdays to paint the church, and recently the Boy Scouts cleared a rubbish heap back of the church and began building an outdoor chapel for services in pleasant weather.

Perhaps the most important result of the flower show is the effect it has had on the community. As one neighbor puts it, "Each year the co-operative spirit spreads deeper and wider among our townspeople, and ever the flower show grows lovelier. Here is a living example of what happens when Christianity is lived daily—and not confined to words alone or to a few hours on Sunday."

Converting unsightly dump into outdoor chapel was man-sized job for Scouts. Services are held here in pleasant weather

The Asphalt Tile of Enduring Beauty

KARR SHANNON

If you plan to buy a home, the reading of this article may be worth a $1,000 to you. At least, if I could have read what I am going to tell you—if I could have read about it instead of finding out by trial and error—I would be $1,453 better off.

We had sold our home in a small town, and were moving to the city. We had never lived in a city, and were looking forward with great anticipation to the urban conveniences that had never been ours to enjoy. Our two boys were ready for high school and college. I had secured a white-collar job that would enable us to keep the wolf from the back door and keep the boys in school.

For two days we were piloted over the city by real-estate salesmen. We were trying to find a house that would be within the price range of our savings and also be appropriate for our needs.

At last we found what we were looking for. It was a clapboard affair—not gaudy, of course, but rather imposing. It was well built, with three bedrooms, plenty of closet space, attractive kitchen built-ins, automatic water heater, tub bath, hardwood floors. The walls and ceilings had been redone with a technique that made them little short of a dream. The outside was newly painted. The lumber was good—not a knot in the entire structure. And the whole place appeared to be mouse-proof.

It was an ideal location, too. One block from the trolley line, two blocks from a shopping center that included grocery, drugstore, barber and beauty shop, laundry, and variety store. It was a good neighborhood and convenient to schools.

All these points were emphasized by the salesman, and the price tag didn't look bad.

We bought the place and moved in-family and furniture.

The hardwood floors appeared a little dingy, so we had them sanded. This involved an outlay of $40. Then, without asking any questions of those with more experience, we got brush and varnish and gave the floors the works. Nothing like saving money!

That added up to our first blunder. The newly-varnished floors were sticky, and simply wouldn't dry out. After a couple of days, they began to spot. In short, we had made a mess of things. The sander was called back. This time to take off the varnish and, in addition, polish and shellac the floors. The bill this time was $60.

Now we were ready to settle down to the real joy of city life. And then one morning, about three months later, I started to take a bath. There was no water pressure. No faucet on the place would function beyond a dingy dribble. In the meantime I had detected a gurgling sound under the house. I went out on the front porch to behold a stream of water gushing from under our castle and flowing out over the streets.

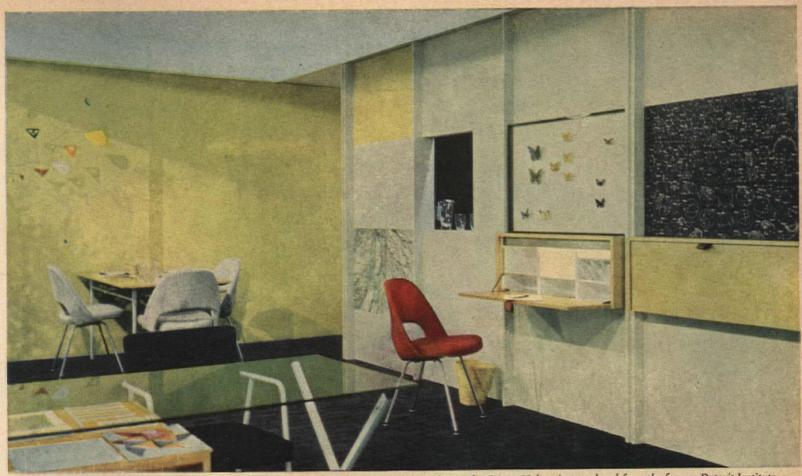

I called a plumber.

Verdict: All the underground water pipes were rusted outrotten. This meant a complete replacement job! The cost: $210.

Two months later, the autumn rains descended hard and steady. During one downpour, my wife noticed that the ceiling paper in a corner of the front bedroom was soaked and that water was also running down the inside wall.

Garbed in raincoat and flop-hat, I borrowed a ladder from a neighbor and climbed on top the house. It was a sickening dis-

How's Your Local Color?

We've taken up the cause for color! Waving a paintbrush and a handful of color samples, we're telling you right here and now that your pride of home ownership, your property value, the value of your entire neighborhood can be increased by the deft use of color on the outside of your house. Just see in the picture above the difference in two sides of the same street—if one group of houses were in shades of white and gray, the other side distinguished by good exterior color schemes.

Interior decorators have been known to disagree on many points, but they do meet on one common platform. They agree to a man that color is the cheapest and most effective way to change a banal, unorganized room into one that's cheerful, easy-to-live-in. The same set of tools, the same set of rules are just as applicable to the outside of your house as to the inside. Whether you're building from the ground up, buying a ready-built place, or giving a lift to your airplane bungalow, the effective use of color is one of the most powerful single aids you can use.

We all know of someone who bought up a simple, average house, rearranged it here and there, used a little talent to great effect, painted it over with the skill of an old master, and sold it at a snug profit. That's fine, and we're all for it. But why not do the same thing for your home, even if you're not going to move? You thereby add to the value of not only your own particular layout but to the entire neighborhood.

There's an old saying: "Not every man will take counsel; every man will take money-therefore, money is better than counsel." Color counsel is a thriving business; color-counselors all over the country have successfully shown that colorstyling of homes is a money-making agent. Maybe you're not particularly touched by the idea of individualizing your home for your own soul's sake, but doesn't your ear quiver just a little bit at the thought of making it worth more when you want to sell? One well-known example of profitable color styling was the work of a New York decorator, Dorothy Draper. She was hired by a shrewd Manhattan real estate organization to give the finishing touch to a group of brownstone tenement houses in an ordinary neighborhood which they had remodeled into small apartments. Color-wise Draper painted all the houses black, painted the cornices and trim crisp white, painted every entrance door a different bright color-yellow, red, green, blue, purple. These same apartments today fetch very fancy rentals, and this block on Sutton

One body color plus one trim color is the safest choice if you're unsure. Yet here's an effective 3-color scheme. The natural-stained clapboards count as the body color, dusty pink is the trim color, green-tinged blue is used on front door. The Sherman K. Hardy home, Lexington, Mass.

Local Color

(Begins on page 29)

Place South is one of the most desirable addresses in New York City. Real estate values have increased in the entire neighborhood.

It is in the matter of mass-produced housing projects that color has proved most effective—and has been as often neglected. "Developments," they are called, or "new additions." Block after block of the same houses, built to the same plan, all for economy's sake. They are good buys for the average American family because you get more for your money in a builder's house than if you attempted to build the same house yourself. But there are certain disadvantages to living in such a development, aside from the economic advantages. The most depressing to some home owners is the "peas in a pod" or "rubber stamp" look that makes their home indistinguishable from a neighbor's. True, some builders are able to achieve a degree of difference by varying exterior details.

But more builders could achieve greater individuality for such homes would they but follow the lead of Levitt and Sons, the world's largest builders of homes. This organization recently hired Beatrice West, a color expert from Dallas, Texas, to color-style a huge new home development the Levitt organization built on Long Island, New York. The houses sold like hot cakes, and today if you want to buy in Levittown, you have to sign up six months ahead. Beatrice West's work on color, incidentally, was first brought to public attention in the pages of The American Home ("Just Like Peas in a Pod? Nonsense!"—The American Home, January, 1948, pp. 16–18).

The variety of exterior color schemes in Levittown is amazing, considering that interior plans are practically identical. Colors, though grayed and rarely used full strength save for accent, are nevertheless striking. Warm grays, beige, browns, greens, and even dusty pink are the main "body colors" of the houses; but on each house there is a distinctive note of strong color used in a small quantity—butter-yellow, barnred, turquoise, bright pink. For the most part, strong color is used to play up important details—the front door, a wind-break at the entrance, or shutters.

The important role that color plays in the life of Levittown residents is the gift of individuality. No home is quite like a neighbors; each home has a character of its own. Yet, considered block by block, there is a harmonious blending of colors that makes the average neighborhood look drab indeed by comparison.

But what of the home owner who has no plans for building, or moving to a new site—the settled resident of any American street? The advantages of single home improvement are clear to the individual property owner. But for greatest community benefit, to improve an entire neighborhood, it should affect all the houses in your block—or as many houses as there are co-operative neighbors! Nor is any "master color plan" necessary—merely an attempt between neighbors, over a period of years, to give a little more thought and attention to what color can do for house and neighborhood, to venture away from the standard white and gray and cream that is the color palette of suburban America.

In the end, however, the test must be made by you, yourself. If your instincts are venturesome, but it seems like an unnerving departure from accepted standards, why not make a cardboard model of your house and test-paint it with showcard paints or water colors? Study it for a while and see if you like it. Or if you have a friend who is an amateur artist, get him to make a rough sketch of your house and paint in the desired colors.

Most people know the charm of the New England barn-red house with its crisp white trim. For a good example of how such a scheme can bring new life to an old house, see "This House Changed its Point of Vew!", The American Home, June, 1950, page 34. You won't be flying in the face of tradition if your taste runs to barn-red—it is the first exterior paint scheme to be used in Colonial American-and has a couple of centuries of authority behind it!

Pretty pastel houses are commonplace in much of the world—except America. For centuries the Mediterranean people have painted their houses pink and blue, and travelers to Bermuda know the wonderful effect of bright pink houses dotting the landscape. In Charleston and other places in our own South you will still find lovely old brick houses painted faded Watermelon pink, shadowed with the tracery of ironwork picked out in white, black, or deep green, fragile, haunting.

editors, but Dorothy Lambert Trumm, with the busiest fingers in nine counties and a houseful of lovely things that have inspired many American Home Patterns, certainly practices what she preaches. Whether it's hooking a rug, painting designs on furniture, or sewing up a farthingale on a dressing table, if it's an American Home Pattern, chances are more than even that Dorothy or Dorchen, who has inherited her mother's gift, has designed it or made it herself.

Much of Dorothy's time is spent here at The American Home, figuring out new ways for you to beautify old pieces of furniture, bric-a-brac, or lamps. Many American Home Patterns are created in the workshop, others are tested in various ways in order to make sure that you can execute them with the greatest of ease. But her real love is her tiny, charming home miles away in Westchester County. Her living room is on the cover of this issue—it almost talks to you of old times and ancient joys. Walls are of swamp cypress, ceiling of old beamed oak, floor of wide pine boards taken from a 200-year-old house, pewter over the fireplace. This is the place where she and Dorchen get most of their inspirations for designs, for re-doing and reclaiming, this is the place where she and Dorchen really live their work.

We discovered a whole treasure of new patterns up at her place one day when we dropped in. If you like her things and the kind of house she prefers to live in, you can buy American Home Patterns and duplicate many of her beautiful pieces for your own home. Actually, while there are so many things which look as though only a wizard could possibly make them turn out the way they do, the fact is that, in practically all cases, the only thing which makes the difference is taking your time—taking it easy. Dorothy makes this very strong point, a common-sense point which some of us are apt to overlook—take plenty of time, go slow, but go surely. Then when you're finished, there'll be no retracing, no retracking. She figures if she can do it, so can you. We agree.

Especially interesting to all of us who come to life at the thought of a good bargain, is the way Mrs. T. and Dorchen have gathered together old, broken-down, pitiful pieces of plain junk, and beaten them into show-pieces. If you could ever see for yourself what they've accomplished, you'd probably look at all the old stuff you've ever stashed away in a dark corner and start dreaming on your own. For instance, the old meeting-house bench which you can see in the picture which shows the dining table-it runs across the back of it, in front of the window-was just this much short of becoming firewood. It was piled up in the basement of a church, just waiting for a cold day. The girls retrieved it, mended it carefully, painted it black, and now it's in a place of importance. Also notice the pie cupboard on page 34 way over on the left-hand side. It was a dilapidated-looking doozey that looked as if it had lost its last friend when our little Hawkshaws picked it up for $4.00. No one can believe it when they see it now-mending, refinishing, replacing the rusty old tin panels with masonite, painting a Norwegian design on it, have transformed a piece of nothing into a stunning article of furniture. You can do the same thing.

Gun-metal walls, suggestive of soft slate blue, are different and cool-looking in the bedroom. The dormer-window wall, bed ruffle, headboard, and shutter panels are all covered with the same chintz. They made the headboard and shutter from our Blueprint Pattern 1218. The lamp at the left, made from an old ginger canister, is painted from Pattern 1313, designed by Dorchen. The cabinet at the foot of the bed holds pillows, extra blankets, and comforters.

The dining-kitchen is smallish in size, but tremendous in good ideas. Besides the pie cupboard and the meeting-house bench, they've added two slat-back chairs, each $3.98, painted dull black, with a yellow leaf design across the back. The caned chair is the one used as a model for our chair-caning pamphlet 1272. The sawbuck table is made from Blueprint Pattern 1256. A solid green shade on an old carboy was given a new personality by adding a stenciled border of carnations, Pattern 1296. All of which should inspire you to send for AMERICAN HOME Patterns, prime your paintboxes, and get going.

The Rowleys "take it easy"

MARY ALICE ROCHE

When we arrived, that sun-drenched September afternoon, there they were, the whole Rowley family—Mr. and Mrs., Everett, Jr., Marjory, and young Rett—out on the flagstone terrace, eating ginger cookies and drinking "Rowley specials" (half a glass of coffee ice cream filled as often as desired with ginger ale—and more ice cream!).

"What's this?" we demanded in astonishment. "You folks are supposed always to be hard at work, not sitting down taking it easy."

"If you had come a little earlier," observed Mr. Rowley from his comfortable camp chair, "you would have found us all 'occupied as usual.' Young Ev was dividing daylily clumps for a neighbor, Marjory and Rett were gathering leaves, Marion was planting bulbs, and I was putting compost on the perennial beds."

"And anyhow," Mrs. Rowley interrupted, "I don't see why it surprises you to find us taking it easy. We've been doing that almost all summer."

"H'm," we murmured, incredulously, "like that hot day in August, I suppose, when the two of you were down on your hands and knees dividing iris. Or that other day when Mr. Rowley was running—or being run by—the power mower out in the back garden and you were trimming the hedge in the hot sun, and simultaneously—and involuntarily—reducing."

Mrs. Rowley laughed at my disbelief. "Oh yes, the grass does have to be cut now and then, and there's always some weeding and trimming to do. But that doesn't take too long. Summer garden work is soon done, leaving you plenty of time to enjoy yourself—and your garden. Of course, I don't call it work when I spend a couple of hours in a heavenly sweet bed of honeysuckle gathering flowers to dry for potpourri. And cutting the faded heads of the phlox is one of the pleasantest occupations I know of for a summer morning, when the air is fresh and a little breeze tantalizes you with its unnamable fragrances.

"If, at such a time, you stop for a moment and stand very still while you concentrate on sniffing and trying vainly to decide just which flowers the little breeze had last visited, a tiny hummingbird may be encouraged to venture back for another sip of nectar from the near-by lilies or bergamot. He is such a fascinating little creature! His iridescent plumage shimmers in the sunlight as his vibrating, all-but-invisible wings suspend him, poised in midair, above some nectar-laden flower. Then, suddenly, he will dart straight up, only to plunge down again, squeaking like mice at play."

Mr. Rowley agreed that there is a thrill in seeing birds at such close quarters, but had an amendment to offer. "Really, the very best

Converts to modern live here

An architect makes the switch to modern design and swears that Colonial living was never like this Large-figured wallpaper with deep green background makes Colonial furniture more at home in modern surroundings. Door, directly accessible from front entrance, leads to hall opening to kitchen, bedrooms, bath, and garage

Fireplace wall is a mass of white painted brick which extends beyond the corner of the house into yard. It screens large window from the street. Fireplace itself is simple opening. Absence of mantel saved several hundred dollars in costs

It all began when we sold our two-story Colonial house," R. O. Steffen, architect-owner of this trim modern house, told us. "My wife and son and I took a three-month vacation in California. That trip was the downfall of a dyed-in-the-wool Colonial addict! The simplicity, wholesomeness, and downright practicality of honest-to-goodness modern living hit me right where I live."

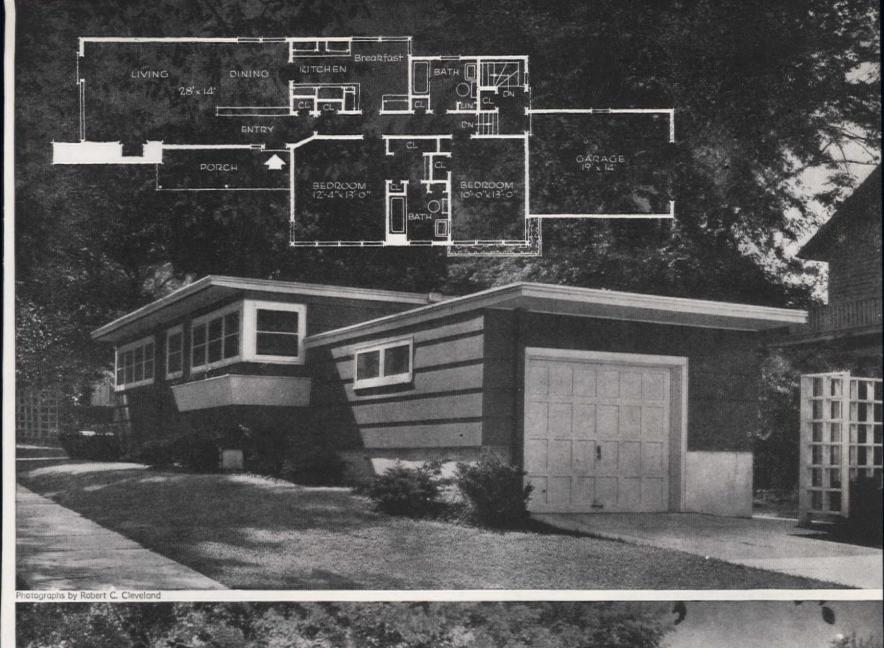

Back again in Wauwatosa, Wisconsin, the Steffens scouted around and found an attractive corner lot where there were fine shade trees, beautiful gardens surrounding the near-by houses, and easy access to a school and shopping center. Mr. Steffen put the garage on the lower portion of the sloping lot so there is only a short approach from the street to the garage, the play area, and drying yard which are screened by a trellis fence fronted by evergreens. The main entrance, on the quieter side street, is dramatically emphasized by a bold whitewashed brick fireplace wall. There isn't a sign of any of the adjoining houses from any of the main windows.

The entrance hall, living room, and dining corner cover a single area, 14 feet wide by 28 feet long, with the entryway separated from the dining area by an egg-crate partition. To the right there is direct access from the front door to the hall opening to kitchen, bedrooms, bath, and garage. The master bedroom, 13 feet by 14 feet, has a dressing alcove and connecting bath. The transom windows, four feet above the floor, provide real privacy for a room that fronts on the street. Furniture can be placed under these windows to give the small room an appearance of greater space.

To give the house real summer comfort, Mr. Steffen piped water to the flat roof for air cooling, vented the soffits of the overhang to allow air to pass through the roof, put in plenty of insulation, and installed fans in the kitchen, living-room, and bedroom ceilings, with ducts to the outside so that the air can be changed in all rooms once a minute when desired.

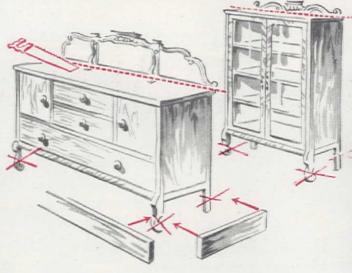

The Steffens have found their house lives in perfect harmony with the other more conventional houses in the neighborhood. As a convert to modern, Architect Steffen says, "Believe me, when it comes to comfort, there's no such thing as not being able to teach an old dog new tricks."

Suite Memories

DAVE CLARK

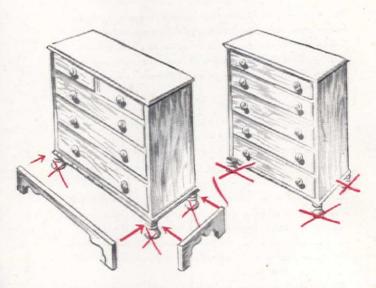

Remember that old imitation maple suite that looked so fancy when you bought it years ago, then got shot into the back bedroom when new furniture took its place? Haul it out again, and put it to good use. You can make it over very simply, paint it if you wish, or bleach and pickle it, and you don't have to be a Sheraton or a Hepplewhite, either.

Look at the wonderful job you can do with an old dining-room sideboard and china cabinet. Take off the legs, the fussy business at the back, make a simple wooden base, and look at the result! A run-of-the-mill library table, archaic today, makes a 1950 coffee table by merely shortening its legs and bleaching it. It's a short cut from the dated bureau on the opposite page to the streamlined bedroom chest which fits into the best company. Remove the mirror, saw off the legs, and place it on a simple base. Take the mirror out of its frame, put modern drawer-pulls on the chest, put them all together and see the difference! Two dowdy chests with their legs removed, placed one on top of the other, make a slick-looking highboy. Would you ever think you could make an attractive desk out of the chest at the right by merely taking out two drawers, pigeon-holing the space with plywood, making a new base, and making the drawer fronts into the writing surface?

There's a lot of comfortable, fine furniture being sold today, at reasonable prices, and we're all for taking advantage of the skill which our modern designers put into their products. But there probably isn't a house today that doesn't have some old furniture stuck away some place, which could serve a good purpose if it were revived with a little effort. That's what we're talking about. How about looking around?

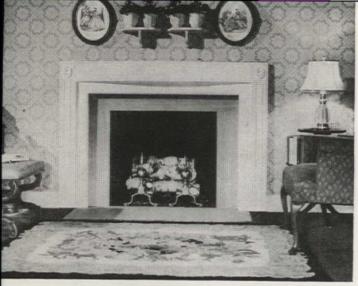

Chest becomes desk by taking off fronts of two top drawers and strip between. Glue together, screw plywood panel on inside. Hinge lid. Make compartments as shown. Replace legs with bracket foot base

Two old chests get the youth treatment. Remove the legs, make a simple base, then place one on top of the other. 18th Century drawer pulls, a new paint job, you have a highboy

The simple detail of this modern version of a classic mantel design is good for a rather formal room. The usual shelf is absent, but the fascia board bows out gracefully. Price is about $47

Here, for an informal room of Colonial atmosphere, we have an authentic copy of an Early American mantel with a rich but simple molding like a picture frame around the fire. Approximately $47

For those who like the Georgian spirit, there are reproductions of originals with all the fine details and proportions that make this style so pleasant and popular. Approximate price $57

You can buy these ready-made!

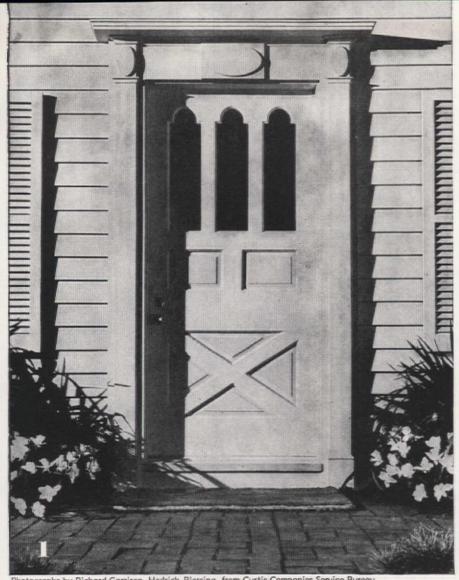

Each one was reproduced from an authentic design of years ago, or adapted by a modern-day architect or designer to fit into a more upto-date background, while retaining its Colonial character. You can buy these ready-made from your local lumber or millwork dealer, at a reasonable price, all ready for easy installation.

Practically all of the beautiful Colonial woodwork which impresses us so in the historical houses of America was planned and executed by the finest craftsmen of that time. Each object was individually designed, "custom-made" as we call it now. Naturally, most of us can't afford that sort of thing today, so a group of architectural woodwork manufacturers have chosen some of the best designs and either duplicated them or used the design as a basis from which to produce something more adaptable to the individual taste.

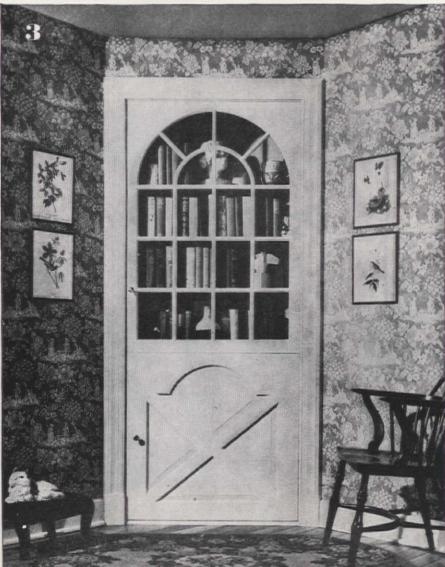

There are three woodwork features which we're apt to notice first when we walk into a house: the front entrance, fireplace mantel, and china cabinets. Especially the entrance. It's the thing we stare at when we're waiting to be greeted. The fireplace and china cabinet are built-in, and in many cases their style determines to a great extent the decorating and furnishings—sort of sets the tempo. Hence, choose most carefully when you build your new house or remodel an old one. One thing that's always good to keep in mind—when in doubt, keep them simple!

To the left and on the facing page are a few examples of the fine work done by one of our architectural woodwork manufacturers. Prices are average for the country, and don't include installation costs since they will vary with the individual home and the local wage scale.

- 1. The simple, classic lines found in many Colonial home entrances, used with any of a number of paneled door designs, with or without glass, goes well with all the standard wall constructions and materials. Approximate price of frame with door $126
- 2. Particularly attractive with a wide entrance hall is this popular, dignified entrance with side sash to brighten the hall with daylight, and a transom that may be glass or a fan panel design. Frame and paneled door shown cost about $286
- 3. For the informal room this simple china cabinet, an authentic copy of an early Eighteenth century design, is both charming and functional. Here it is used as a bookcase, with the cupboard at the bottom for miscellaneous storage. Costs approximately $88
- 4. In a dining room the bottom cupboard is excellent for trays and other meal-serving accessories. The shelves, open or behind glass doors, hold china, as in this handsome and formal Colonial cabinet for the more dignified room. Approximate price $154

ne-floor rambling houses are far and away the most popular today. "Ranch House" is the catchword, even though in the Midwest there are tri-level "ranch houses" and on Long Island two-story "ranch houses!" But there are many arguments for the twostory house (and we don't mean "two-story ranch house"), and they're sound.

It works this way. When you build six rooms and a garage spread out on a single floor, you've got to provide foundations or floor slabs for all six rooms. And, you've got to roof all six rooms plus the garage. But split in half and put three on top of three -see what we mean? And that's how we arrived at our title-just as much in half the space. You will hear women exclaim on viewing a ranch house-"think of the steps it saves." Well, does it save steps, taking them horizontally instead of vertically? And still another argument for the two-story house-and an important one it is-the solution of the narrow plot problem. You can't ramble much on a narrow plot, even if you want to. Build a two-story house, and there's room left for a pleasant lawn and a nice garden and outdoor living area in the back. Let's look at the plan; Nearly half the house has been given to two large rooms. Both the living room and owner's bedroom measure a generous 14 by 20 feet. Each has its own wood-burning fireplace, optional when you build, of course.

The dining room opens off the living room and gains a spacious feeling from the lovely bay window doing everything the modern "picture window" does-flooding the room with sunlight, framing the garden outside. The kitchen has a compact U-shaped working space. A utility room opens off the kitchen, with space for laundry tubs, washer, dryer, a broom closet, and a lavatory.

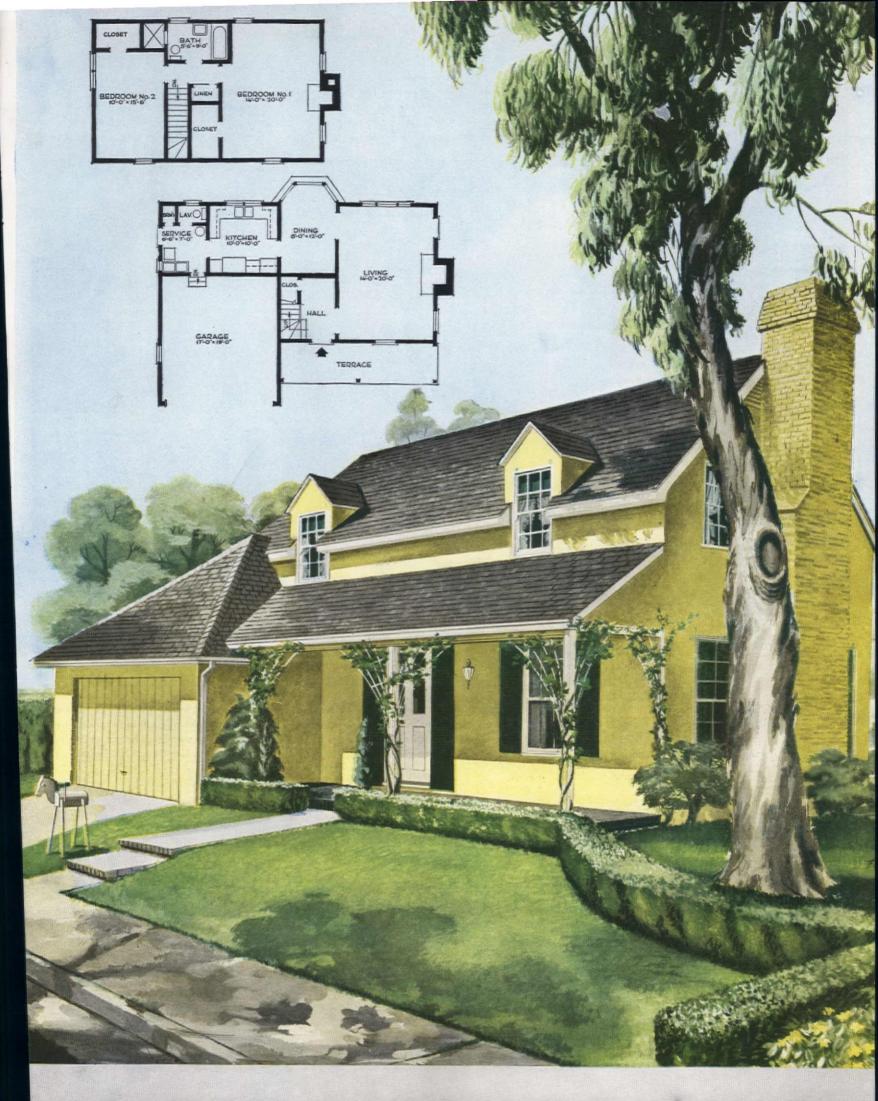

Upstairs there's a second good-sized bedroom, 10 by 151/2 feet. The closets are all king-size-the one in the owner's bedroom practically a dressing room. The bath settles the shower-vs.-tub argument-you can have both. There's a stall shower plus a built-in tub. So what's old-fashioned about this yellow colonial?

Architect Edla Muir designed this house for Mr. and Mrs. Jay Marchant. The Marchants' problems were so typically American, and architect Muir's plans so successful that we have made architect's blueprints available at $5 per set if you'd like to build this house.

BEFORE: Here's a close-up of one corner in this worn-out, bedraggled room. Watch what a few hours, some muscle-making, fresh paint can do!

1. This is a bad situation. The plaster and ceilings, as you see, are the victims of water seepage—caused by water backing up through shingles. It's a common complaint

2. First scrape off all loose plaster with putty knife. Some large pieces may fall off ceiling. Be sure all remaining plaster is firm. Sand edges clean with electric sander

6. Now prepare wooden muntins. Scrape all mold and loose paint, especially in corners. Brush off with stiff wire brush so that surface is left smooth and clean

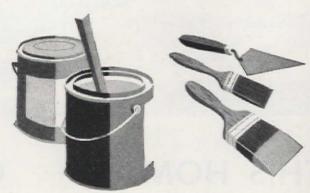

7. Brush on new preparation (obtainable at local paint store) which can be peeled off easily after you finish painting the sash frames; leaves glass unspotted

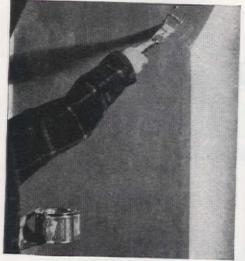

8. Shellac all wooden muntins and sash frames to make good base for paint. Get in corners, so wood will be protected from condensation. Use 2 coats, 24 hours apart

- 3. Wet cracks and holes when plaster is smooth and evened off. Make spackle mixture fairly thick so it holds firmly. Fill cracks and holes with putty knife
- Allow spackle to dry thoroughly. If holes or cracks are deep, allow at least 2 days. Sand mended surfaces smooth and even. Small electric sander saves work
- 5. When you have smoothed all filled holes and cracks, apply shellac over the spackled areas. Use fresh shellac as it comes from can. Dry overnight, and then sand once more

 Have plenty of newspapers on hand.
 Tape to wall with masking tape all around window, spread on surrounding floor area for protection from spray

10. We used a small electric sprayer for window painting. Use 2 or 3 coats of egg-shell-finish enamel, strained and thinned with turpentine—24 hours between coats

11. Use undercoater for first coat; forms perfect base for smooth finished job. Start in one corner and work all around room. Apply finish coat, using 4- or 5-inch brush

AFTER: We lined dormer with same chintz used for headboard, shutters, and bed valance. Woodwork is painted white. Remaining walls are painted slate blue; ceiling white painting

• Take everything out of the room if you can. If not, cover up what's left. Be sure the ceiling, walls, and woodwork are washed clean, and fill all cracks with a good spackle mixture before you start painting. When surface is dry, shellac it; then when the shellac is dry, give it a good sanding. If you follow the steps given above for preparing your windows, it will be to your distinct advantage.

After you have painted the windows, the rest is clear sailing. Here is a trade secret that will prove of invaluable help in achieving professional results.

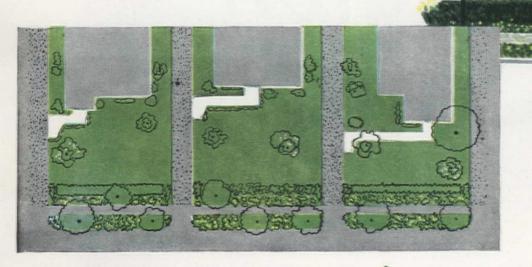

Never paint flat paint over flat paint if you are using dark colors or the color will streak and show brush marks. Apply the first coat of undercoater, let dry, and then a finish coat of flat paint. If the wall looks the least bit streaky and the color uneven, it needs yet another coat. Start all over again. Apply undercoater once more, let it dry, then add another coat of flat paint, to insure smooth, velvety results.

Put Up a Good Front

Whether you're outside looking in, or inside looking out, you benefit from a neighborhood front-yard planting plan

THE PLAN. It gives the three homes a "new look" by, first, replacing the monotonous center entrance paths, and then introducing the six key plant elements: street trees; low hedges; evergreen ground-cover interplanted with spring bulbs; clumps of iris or daylily; and flowering trees

THE PLAN WITH VARIATIONS to meet the needs and interests of different families: The Joneses love a lawn; the Smiths enjoy flowers and entertaining their friends; the Browns want play space for their children and plant effects that call for little coddling

Drawings by Pucci after sketches by the autho

The little houses that line the residential streets of our towns and suburbs are more important than many of us realize. They are where most of us live. Or, if we are of the fortunate few with more spacious dwellings and grounds, it is the little houses and their yards at which we look day after day on our way to business, pleasure, shopping, or our children's schools. It is unfortunate and depressing that often they are not attractive, either because they are neglected, or because, though bravely bedecked with "foundation planting," they are unsuccessful in their effort to be beautiful.

Can these homes and their neighborhoods be made attractive—as homes should be? And if so, how? Perhaps, says someone, through a renaissance in architectural design, an inspirational rebirth such as occasionally sweeps the world and lifts everyday surroundings to a higher art level. True-but probably, by the time that happens, they won't be our homes; we won't be around to witness and enjoy the change. Someone else suggests a higher standard of living based on higher incomes, so that all of us could enjoy what is now the extra luxury of well-planned, well-cared-for grounds. Of course that would help. But remembering the small homes which, despite the money and effort spent on them, are still a bit pathetic as pictures to look at, would it solve the problem to simply increase the number and put more of them on display along our streets? Hardly, although here, I think, we are approaching an important factor of the problem. Perhaps, after all, the big mistake is in attempting to put our homes "on display" at all, to "landscape" each of them into an individual gem and object of admiration.

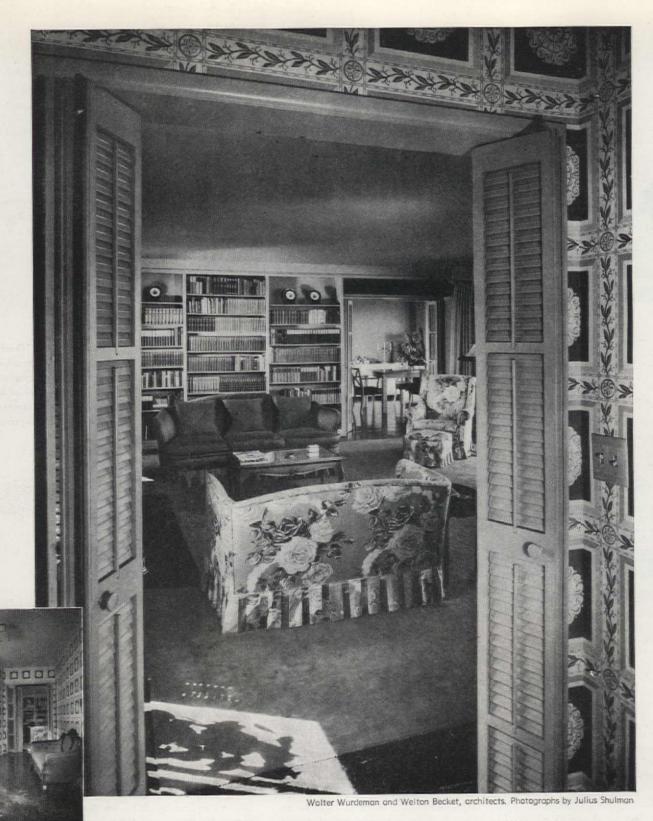

Suppose that, instead, we plan our homes as pleasant places to look out from, our sidewalks as pleasant places to walk along, our suburban streets as pleasant places to drive through. Then the problem becomes quite different, and a solution far more promising. That is the point of view from which the landscape plan suggested here has been approached. It is a very simple plan built around six kinds of plants, examples of which are easily obtainable in any community, from local nurseries or, sometimes, for the asking from neighboring gardeners. They are: suitable street trees; a low hedge plant; an evergreen ground-cover; spring-flowering bulbs; sturdy, dependable perennials like iris or daylilies, and small flowering trees. As shown here for three homes, the scheme could apply to an entire block or street to give pleasing uniformity without monotony.

Note first that most of the planting involved is concentrated along both sides of the sidewalk to make a decorative parking strip. The view from each house, formerly an unbroken prospect of the street, its traffic, and the houses across the way, is now dominated by its individual lawn against a pleasant background of plant silhouette which, however, permits frequent glimpses through so as to avoid any hemmed-in feeling. Also, through the use of small flowering trees on the front lawn, it "breaks back" into that area so the whole space is pleasantly integrated. The resulting sense of "semiprivacy" is one of the most satisfying features of a suburban location, a happy medium between the limited, constricted outlook of the city and the wide open expansiveness of a country setting.

Taking up our other objectives-pleasanter sidewalks and streets -this may be considered by some too altruistic, even quixotic. But remember that it is not only our neighbors who use the sidewalks, but also we who live along them. Furthermore, what we do in our neighborhoods may encourage other citizens to do likewise along their streets. And even the habitual stay-at-home cannot escape the grimness of unrelieved paved streets and bare sidewalks. The idea of sidewalk planting for the benefit of passers-by is not new or revolutionary. The double rows of elms along New England streets reflect it, and the charm of many southern towns is due to the shade cast by their street trees. Two generations ago the Midwest led in this respect; and, today, in many parts of the country examples can be found where the voluntary extension of home plant-

ETHEL MCCALL HEAD

Once Over Rightly

The young Walter Ringers got a really bang-up wedding present when two of their friends presented them with a complete set of plans and ideas for remodeling the large old summer house the Ringers planned to make into their home. One of these friends was Ellen Pennell, well-known food and equipment expert, and you can just bet that here was one kitchen that didn't get left on the tag end of either budget or plans. With a minimum of structural changes, shrewd capitalizing on existing good points, and some sound thinking on stepsaving, she came up with these ideas that transformed a great, barren barn of a kitchen into a modern wonder room.

Some of the good common-sense features of this kitchen include storing the informal pottery dishes near the breakfast nook. A counter on one side of the refrigerator is used for salad preparation and one on the other side serves as a beverage bar, a neglected item in most kitchens.

Elizabeth Ringer is justly proud of her Hadley china, and the colors in it are used as the theme of decoration for the kitchen. The blue pottery has pinks, greens and so on, and the Ringers' friend Larry Mork used these colors to decorate their breakfast nook, some cupboard doors. The counter near the back door is extremely handy, especially when throwing a large party.

Indoors practically becomes outdoors when these big windows are opened in summertime. Mrs. Ringer calls her brood in for a simple kitchen luncheon. Counter makes serving much easier

A convenient towel rack near the sink slides out when in use, disappears behind a door when dishes are done. Just one of the many work-lighteners in this kitchen!

Kitchen range is the focal point in the over-all planning and forms a compact working unit in the center of the kitchen. Such a unit was a wise beginning in arranging other step-savers for a large, awkward room

We took September seriously for this month's setting. Many of the flowers grow in your own yard, otherwise your local florist can supply them at reasonable prices. Before you start, just two things: stand them in water up to within an inch of the flower itself for about two hours, and if your table is set outdoors, anchor the flowers securely, keep them low. If you don't, a frisky fall breeze might upset your flower cart. And please don't worry about having your arrangement perfectly symmetrical in this case. An off-balance look is far more original

Nutrition experts say the schoolday lunch is a vitally important meal for the growing child—to replenish energy. Whether eaten at home or carried to school, this lunch should include a hot dish. If you have the daily problem of packing a lunch, then here's a sensible way to provide the needed hot dish for your junior or junior miss—tomato oup in a vacuum bottle. Prepare the soup as cream of tomato, by adding nilk instead of water. That way, it's extra-nourishing, and the child also gets his quota of milk. Most children simply dote on this soup.

The Oven Makes the Meal

Here's a good, substantial oven dinner which takes about one hour's cooking time. It's full of vitamins, easy to prepare, and simple to serve.

Far be it from us to detract from the rich and rare results of stewing or steaming or barbecuing and such, but for just plain convenience plus gustatory gratification, you can't beat oven meals. Even in hot weather you're not conscious the heat's on, thanks to the magic of modern insulation. The oven gets hot, but you keep cool.

We sneaked in two rather touchy subjects, liver and carrots, but they're such benefactors of the human race, it seems a shame to neglect them. So we've prepared them with a flair, hoping that we can make at least one convert in the family. Soluble tea and coffee will cut down time and work. The salad with its dressing is a refrigerator preparation, so that's no problem.

For the main dish we stuffed green peppers with chopped liver spiced up with savory sausage, mixed to a happy blend, and barely recognizable to liver disdainers. An easy version of Duchess potatoes circles each pepper, but there's no great loss if you want to skip that. Don't overlook the directions for making a clever little pastry tube out of brown paper, however. Might come in handy. Notice, too, that we use aluminum foil for making potatoes. Very up-to-date.

Fluffy Rice Norman can be made with either quick-cooking or regular rice, since we tested the recipe with both. Vegetables en Papillote, French for "in paper," are cooked in our new-found friend, aluminum foil, which does wonders for them. Hot Fruit Compote, pointed up with cinnamon, cloves, and lemon, is swell either hot or cold. Fresh, canned, or frozen fruits (choose your own or follow our lead) baked just right—dessert delight!

The salad is simple, but far from ordinary, because of a wonderful dressing made by whipping a ripe avocado with a little lemon juice, served with pineapple spears.

luck!" You can give them the old routine about its being "no trouble at all" and really mean it this time.

With a pardonable pride and a slight smirk for our own ingenuity, we offer two party menus. We've an honest-to-goodness dinner party that's just the ticket for wandering relatives or the boss himself. There's a midnight snack to top off an evening of television or conversation that's left everyone in a real hungry frame of mind. For each there's a shopping list and a menu.

On with the dinner! It's straight from the pantry shelf but as sumptuous as anyone in his right mind could expect. Start out with Onion Soup which ranks right along with Lafayette and Charles Boyer as France's greatest gifts to America. Buy it by the can and float a small piece of toast in each serving with a heavy sprinkling of grated cheese. Then the Company Casserole, a lighthearted way to face the most trying emergency. Slice a jar of small olives and coarsely chop a can of pimientos. Combine these taste-teasers with two cans of chunk-style tuna or boned chicken. Add and blend in a can of condensed mushroom soup, a can of mushrooms (this is really gilding the lily) with the liquid, and the liquid from a can of peas. Now arrange alternate layers of cornflakes, tuna or chicken mixture, and peas in a casserole. Cover and place a moderately hot oven (400°F.) for thirty to forty-five minutes. This will serve four to six. Add vegetable dish, salad, and hot corn muffins, and believe us, you're really in business. Finish off with a fig pudding (canned, naturellement), a vanilla sauce topping, and lots of steaming hot coffee. For a nice September version of coffee you might try café au lait, another delicious French import. It's a simple matter of one part hot coffee and one part scalded milk served in a glass.

For a snack, serve our AMERICAN HOME version of pizza, the Italian pie. It's a small but filling morsel straight from heaven. If you're ever too rushed even to make pastry mix, you might try spreading the mixture on English muffins and putting them under the broiler till bubbly. With all this in stock, you'll be tempted to drop in on yourself.

cake. It's my own hand and it is cold water poured right on top of uncooked cake batter! Got a cake-hating man in the family? Well, ma'am, I give you a gilt-edged guarantee that here's a dessert to wean him from pie-at least some nights of the week. More of a pudding than a cake, it is goopy and delicious and, heavens above, how easy on the cook. I've given only two versions of it, but the "sauce" variations are countless. Use what you like or what you have-but make it. Your hand will tremble when you first pour the cold water over it, but if that is astonishing, so is the result. Edie Ramsay saw me doing it, and late for a date as she was, sat right there in the kitchen to see the result. She's a good cook in her own right and a trusting friend-but she felt sure this time I'd gone too far. Write Miss Ramsay, our Home Equipment Editor, for a testimonial. I haven't asked her, but I think she'll give it-if her idea of her share means anything.

It may be double-crossing, but if your husband is not quick in taking my advice re the Boula—you latch onto it. I told him it was a famemaker and that I can say again. A word to the wise . . .

"Slow and easy" are, to me, synonymous, but "quick and easy" are not. Quick meals all too often mean that you are in the kitchen every minute. Everything must be started and finished together. It is a rat race to get it on the table at the exact moment it must be eaten to be good.

Now, when you have company or a party, it should not be based on a schedule that breaks up good talk or leaves you, the hostess, a nervous wreck because the food is getting cold or spoiling. Fixed time schedules and a hostess making like a clucking hen defeat the whole purpose of getting jolly people together. And all too often "quick" family dinners are just as disastrous. For who will deny that families have an irritating habit of waiting until dinner is on the table to tune in their favorite dinner program or start washing their hands.

Do not think I am agin' quickies. I have my recipe file full of them, and I think there are countless foods far too good to spoil with any sort of fussing. But over the years, I find my Menu Maker reduced more and more to a genuine "quickie" or slow cookers—and fewer and fewer so-called "quick meals." Dishes that can burble away gently and be the better for it, slow-cooking recipes that are not only easier on the cook, but on the purse, that's for me.

And so each month you'll have noticed these slow-cookers, which I can't call "quickies" but shall have to invent some equally fetching name for. Any suggestions?

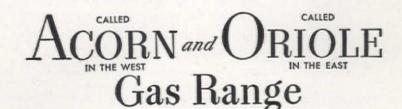

You will when you see this range!

Yes, it's a "dream" range all right! It's a beauty which makes an artist out of its fortunate owner. Catering to creative cooking, it turns your simplest—as well as your fanciest—recipes into taste-tempting, tantalizing masterpieces . . . so sumptuously delicious that your family circle of critics gives you nothing but rave notices!

See this "dream" range today at selected dealers or write to us for further information. You'll find its even-baking Banquet oven can be used right down to the bottom . . . because even the bottom is insulated! And you'll like its high-level broiler and simmer-control burners, too!

is a tattletale

RUTH GARLAND

We all know that "tattletale" gray has long been linked with the unfortunate housewife who can't get her clothes white because she doesn't know the right soaps, detergents, bleaches, bluings, and methods of washing to use. She has learned that to hang such clothes on the line will brand her as a poor housekeeper in the eyes of her neighbors and they are likely to judge all her housekeeping efforts by this one grave mistake.

Many women, even though they have the whitest clothes on the block, are apt to overlook another taletelling indication of poor housekeeping. They forget that a housekeeper can also be judged by the smell of a dishcloth. If you stop to think of the work a dishcloth does, from washing fine crystal to washing a greasy, fishy skillet, it is no wonder it picks up an unsavory combination of odors, but they are not meant to stay in the cloth and can easily be eliminated as follows:-I. Use a fresh dishcloth more often than you use a fresh towel. Remember the towel dries clean dishes, the cloth washes dirty dishes. Too few women have an ample supply of dishcloths, many hate to part with the old dirty, hole-ridden ones, but really dishcloths are expendable and not expensive. Paper ones are available too and can be disposed of easily. 2. After each use, wash in clean soapy water and rinse well. Hang in open air to dry. 3. Include dishcloth in weekly family wash. 4. Soak overnight occasionally in mild solution of bleach and detergent.

Now, can your dishcloth stand the acid test of a good deep breath? Or do you keep your distance while useing it and scour your hands to rid them of the stale, musty odor? Make this test and be your own judge.

How to make a drawer pull ere's a quick, easy way to make yourself a set of smart new drawer pulls. First draw the pattern shown at top of page on paper marked off in ½-inch squares. (1) Cut out pattern and paste on copper or brass thin enough to cut with kitchen scissors. It's easy to get embossed effect on the edges by turning the metal over and making a line on reverse side just inside the edge with a sharpened orangewood stick. For antique finish, place drawer pull in solution of liver of sulphur (beansized piece in 2 oz. of water). Buff edges and tips of design with fine steel wool, leaving rest dark. (2) Handle is bent from piece of metal clothes hanger. Flatten middle portion with hammer over a block and (3) fasten to drawer with two cup hooks, bent closed with pliers. Coat with lacquer to prevent tarnishing.

CLOROX AMERICA'S FAVORITE BLEACH AND HOUSEHOLD DISINFECTANT

Mother lives alone and loves it

We were intrigued by this tiny little house from the minute we first saw it. Its charm and snug efficiency enchant the eye. Mrs. Morley A. Horder's son, Morley, Junior, tells us all about it in his own words:

After father died and most of us had married, we decided to build mother a tiny house of her own. My brother is a builder, I am a designer of houses, so between the two of us we were able to do the job. It has all the charm, all the comfort, and but a fraction of the responsibility she has been accustomed to.

Since my parents had lived in the Orient for years, mother has a fine collection of Oriental pieces. Our first job was to furnish a suitable background. The living room walls are light blue, the ceiling is coral, and the fireplace is of the same paving brick as the exterior of the house. We contrived a small kitchen like a galley. A small bath and dressing room complete the house.

The garden itself is quite simple, requiring very little care. Notice that the flat surface is of fine gravel, thereby obviating lawn-cutting. A brick walk leads to the house.

Now that practically all responsibility has been lifted from her shoulders, mother has a wonderful time with her two chief hobbies—flower arranging and water-color painting. Surrounded by things she has loved for years, she considers herself a lucky woman—and we agree!

A small ceramic elephant stands guard in mother's simple garden entrance. Two side-beds and some planting around the dogwood tree for shade are the only gardening she indulges in right now. No grass, but fine gravel cuts down extra work and contrasts well with small brick walk to the door

Practically everything in this picture came from the Orient. Chest to the left of fireplace is an authentic Chinese wedding chest, Japanese "Imari" ware plates are set in fireplace any a couple these days is looking for the impossible—a place to live with a low rental that will be a comfortable home for them, until the time comes when they can build, buy, or afford a higher rental. The pickings are mighty slim. The Aspells of Tucson, Arizona, refused to let appearances deceive them and created a neat apartment out of what seemed an impossible old house.

You can perform miracles in any room if you spend a great deal of money. The trick here was to do the job with the budget always in mind. Opening was sealed off with plywood and shelves were set into the recess. Coffee table is a luggage rack with a tray on top of it. Curtains were bypassed by the smart device of painting colorful designs in the deep reveals. Floor covering is inexpensive drugget rug. The couch serves as a bed. Kitchen and bath are just off hall—all as neat and handy as a pocket in a shirt.

Lorraine's a lucky girl!

NBC photograph by Elmer W. Holloway

ust as other parents must realize their children are suddenly grown, Bill and I had to face the fact that our eighteen-year-old daughter Lorraine was an adult, anxious for independence. In her last years at high school, her interest in drama was crystallized, and she made a decision to try her hand at a career in the theater. She planned to go to New York to try for the stage.

TESS BENDIX

Bill and I felt she should have more experience in drama before trying her luck in the East. We also felt that if we could compromise with her urge to be on her own, she would be content to be with us a few years more.

We had what we thought was a wonderful idea—turning over our little "playhouse" to Lorraine for her own. We had acquired it with the property when we moved to the San Fernando Valley. Lorraine was delighted with the idea and immediately changed her plans and entered a school of the theater in Los Angeles.

The playhouse was made into a comfortable living room with its own fireplace, a small bedroom, bath, tiny guest room, kitchen. Lorraine chose an Early American scheme and worked closely with the decorator selecting furniture, fabrics, paints for the house.

We feel that the idea is sound. A "studio room" with its own entrance, if possible, would solve other parents' problems (their natural desire to keep the children just a little bit longer with them). At the same time the youngster may close the door and feel that she can sleep, eat, and read without interference from the family.

wall can be salvaged and restored to a useful life. We had some really special Rosemaling designs we wanted to feature, and set out to find a broken-down cupboard so we could show what wonders a design can perform. We found our pie cupboard in a small local antique shop and willingly shelled out $4.00 for it. The panels had nicely rounded moldings, the wood was not badly marked, and only one leg was missing.

We removed the rusted pierced-tin panels. Then the broken leg was sawed on the diagonal so we would have a "mitered" joint when the new leg was added. This makes for a neater finish. All loose boards were glued together, one section at a time. Next step was to bleach wood to even darkened spots. We used a commercial bleach, called Bleach *I and *2. Wipe off bleach with vinegar rinse and allow to dry a full 24 hours. Sanding comes next and requires plenty of elbow grease if you want to achieve a smooth satiny surface. When wood is smooth, brush on a mixture of 2/3 boiled linseed oil, 1/3 turpentine. Dry 48 hours. While this is drying, cut out masonite panels. Paint panels with flat paint and let dry 24 hours. Rub lightly with very fine steel wool. Now you can transfer Rosemaling designs onto panels as directed in our Pattern 1309. After they have dried for several days, fasten into place with small wire nails. We lined cupboard with old-fashioned calico. After the designs had dried for two weeks, we antiqued them so they would blend with soft old wood tones.

Fill loose joints and cracks with Weldwood glue mixed with just enough water to make smooth paste.

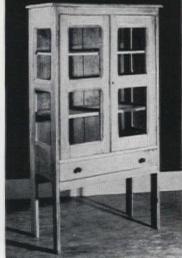

Use lots of glue; surplus can be scraped off when dry

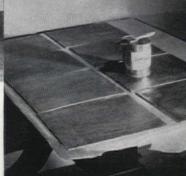

For best results, use pipe clamps to hold glued joints while drying. One at each end of door will hold firmly. If doors are warped, use center clamp

White walls with a pistachio-green ceiling are cleverly offset by one wall of white paper with red and bottle-green design

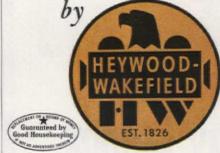

Think you can't afford expensive wallpaper? Sure you can! Because it's not how much you use but how you use it that counts. In each of these three rooms, only one wall was apered. Expensive paper, true, but very few rolls were used. Notice that with bold patterns no pictures are needed, which aves you that much more. If the pattern is gay and splashy, lon't go overboard on your draperies and upholstery-keep them ober. Your lamps can be simple, too. But just look what this one hing does for the entire room! In the Raymond Dorn house hese small areas where wallpaper is used have made the dif-erence between so-so and so good! Take a barrelmake a chair his isn't for sissies, but if you can get your hands on a sugar barrel at your grocer's or pop $2 for one, you can make a good-looking, comfortable chair in a few days' time. Just take it easy, follow instructions carefully, then gloat!

1. You'll need the following tools: hammer, screwdriver, metal saw, wood saw, heavy black pencil, and a drill. Also screws and nails. Make sure the barrel is in good condition. 2. Mark the barrel to the shape of a chair with heavy black pencil, drill holes in the metal rims which extend around the upper back of the barrel. Put small nuts and bolts in these holes so the metal won't snap outward when you cut it. Saw along the black line. This isn't difficult, since barrel wood is easy to cut. 3. Now make a wooden seat of plywood or pine, which you'll have to buy separately. Cut it to fit flush with the front edge and anchor it by setting it on wooden cleats nailed around the inside of the barrel. Drill holes 2 inches from all edges, one inch apart, so you can push through with a needle. Make some holes in the back for tufting. Draw a paper pattern for inside the back, lower front and back, and the cushion. Place batting over the edges, put fabric over batting, sew all this down. Tack on the cording, tuft batting to inside of the back, then cover the entire chair on the outside. All that's left to do is the cushion, and you've got yourself something to be proud of!

4. Comfortable and snug, they make fetching occasional chairs for the bedroom, den, guest room, or living room, depending upon the fabric you use. Just a few hints: Don't try to work too fast. You'll find the result much easier to obtain. Be sure the seat is cut accurately or, better yet, have a lumber yard do it for you.

Nothing finer has appeared on earth," it has been said, "than unlucky people who are real persons. The determining element . . . is not so much what happens to them as the way they take it." One such real person is Robert C. Eldred, crippled veteran of World War II, now proprietor of Windswept, charming antiques shop in East Dennis, Cape Cod.

Bob's home is a Cape landmark. Built in 1846, it has the lines of a Southern colonial plantation house. Even greater than the shop's attractiveness is the inimitable charm of the young proprietor. I asked him what impelled him to follow this particular profession.

"Well," he answered, "I have a deep love for America's cultural past. The reputable antiques dealer helps to reclaim and preserve the material parts of our social heritage. Then, too, people in this profession face a constant challenge of study and research in order to represent honestly the things which they offer for sale." Bob feels that research and study can't be emphasized too much. He and his wife, Edna, are proud of their six-hundred-volume library which they use constantly. "I guess I'd better add," Bob says, "that I'm one of those lucky persons whose work is his pleasure."

The shop bell tinkled and Bob broke away to welcome another visitor. She followed one rigid rule—two dollars was her limit when making a purchase for her collection of cups.

Bob first showed her a few cups and saucers that met this limit. Then he said, "Do you mind if I show you this fine piece of Spode?"

Weathervane is installed atop shop. Made of copper covered with gold, it is model of clipper ship

The blue and white cup and saucer appeared to have a design of dolphins interlaced around its borders. An exquisite rose was centered in the bottom of both cup and saucer.

"This," Bob said, "is known as the Maritime Rose—one of the finest designs produced by Josiah Spode. Now, if I could make a suggestion—why don't you limit the amount you buy rather than the amount you spend. You've spent some six hundred dollars for the pieces that you now own. At the risk of offending you, I must say that your collection has little to offer except quantity. A small collection of rare and exquisite specimens would not only cost you less but would delight the most esthetic taste."

She bought the Spode cup and saucer—the price, seventeen dollars and fifty cents. "The lady seems to have a new light in her eye," Bob said after he closed the door behind her. Then he called my attention to his latest acquisition—a 4½-foot weathervane made of copper and covered with 22-karat gold. "This vane," he told me, "is without a doubt a model of the clipper-ship Great Republic, and is one of the finest, if not the finest, in New England. I an architect. At 15 he took and passed with honors the competitive exams to enter Cooper Union in New York City. By the end of the first term, however, he knew he did not want to become an architect.

In 1933, he settled down to his first nine-to-five job as assistant manager of a small loan company. Here he acquired the ability to appraise furniture and a knowledge of its resale value. Finally, after four years, hating the job of "dunning and chasing people who couldn't pay," he resigned. Then for two summers he acted as host and director of recreation at a summer resort where he met Edna Miller

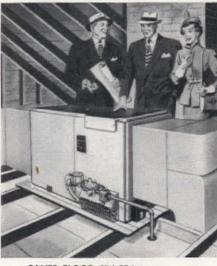

He and Edna were married after he had established himself a career as a life underwriter. Bob loved selling and he skyrocketed to success by writing two hundred thousand dollars' worth of insurance the first year.

Then came December 1941. Bob enlisted. On D-Day, attached to the Navy, he served as a liaison officer supporting landings on Omaha Beach.

On July 28th, it happened. Enemy tiger tanks chased and fired upon him, blowing his left knee joint to bits. Two years later, crippled for life, he was discharged from the hospital. He resumed his position with the insurance company. Soon, however, he found himself unable to endure the constant walking which the selling of insurance required.

Bob faced the situation with his customary imagination and courage. He took immediate account of his assets: his success as a salesman, his lifetime interest in and thorough knowledge of antiques, and, above all, his partner and helpmate, Edna. Out of his bad luck emerged his greatest opportunity-a chance to enter the profession for which he had been preparing since boyhood.

y neighbor, Lee Boswell, is always busy with hobbies. But then, so am I. Each never knows what to expect in the other's back yard or workshop. Recently, when I saw him at work with a board and some pieces of glass and, frankly puzzled, asked, "What goes on now?", he replied, "It's my new aquarium." He had suddenly gone in for tropical fish!

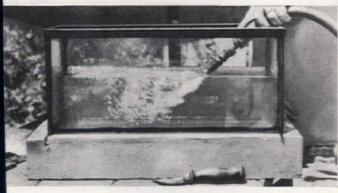

That was weeks ago. By now he has one beautiful big tank for tropical fish on the dining-room buffet and smaller ones scattered from there out to the garage. Most of them he made, himself, and they are mighty well done. Moreover, as he told me, it's not difficult; and to prove he's right, this is how he built the one that started all this commotion, and which was intended for a small breeding tank:

The materials were: A board 2 x 12 x 24 inches for the base;

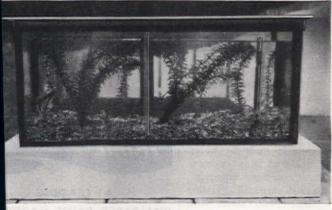

five pieces of scrap plate glass cut to his specifications and beveled by a commercial glass cutter-two ends, each 10 x 12 in., front and back, each 22 x 12 in.,

Force, then smooth, waterproof aquarium cement into bottom d corner cracks. Two can work at this (see picture above title)

Fill tank with water to test for leaks. If any are found, fix before ng farther. Let water "age" a few days before introducing fish inished aquarium with base primed and painted, gravel and spread on bottom, oxygenating plants in place, ready for fish

Beauty in any room begins at the windows! Start there...start right, with proven Kirsch decorating ideas and fine Kirsch drapery hardware. You can achieve magical results, from small investments in energy and dollars. Smart draw draperies, for example, on smooth-working Kirsch traverse (draw cord) rods, add a luxurious new effect to the entire interior—and so inexpensively!

Kirsch traverse (draw cord) rods are smo-o-oth in looks and action. They work better . . . and look better longer . . . because they're made better — by the leaders in the business. The cords are hidden inside the rods . . . Generous, positive overlap of the master slides insures privacy; your curtains stay closed . . . The bone-hard finish lasts years longer! In the adjustable type, four length-sizes enable you to fit any window from 28 in. to 150 in. wide. Kirsch traverse rods are available cut-to-measure, too, for an added touch of "custom" luxury.

and a bottom piece just big enough to fit inside the others when in place; a painted steel band to hold the glass sides tightly together at the top; a can of aquarium elastic cement; washed gravel and sand for the bottom of the tank, and some water ferns and oxygenating plants.

To start, route out, or dado, the baseboard half an inch deep and just wide enough to admit the glass snugly (Fig. 1). Next, force the end pieces into their grooves, then the sides, which overlap the ends to an exact fitting (Fig. 2), and finally lay the bottom piece firmly in place.

As the next step, force the oneinch-wide steel rim (bent into the proper rectangular shape and welded beforehand) down over the top (Fig. 3). In Lee's case it fitted so tightly that a rubber hammer was used to get it into position. Already the tank looked as though it would hold water, but it wasn't ready for that yet. For then came the tedious job of forcing the waterproof cement into all the bottom cracks and the glass joints (Fig. 4). Being extremely pliable, the cement can be rolled into strips or "stringers" about lead-pencil size, pushed down into the cracks with finger pressure, and later smoothed with a small putty knife.

Finally the dadoed grooves in the base beyond the glass were filled with plastic wood, and when that had dried and been sandpapered smooth, the entire base was painted white. The result was a very attractive tank. With the addition of a chromiumplated rim around the top and four corner strips, it would have been stylish enough for any room in the house. Tested with water from a hose (Fig. 5), it proved perfectly tight. So the well-washed gravel and sand were spread on the bottom to cover the glass to a depth of about an inch at the front and up to two inches at the back. Then the plants were inserted into the sand, and the tank was covered with a piece of thinner glass to prevent excessive evaporation.

Although it was actually finished, the aquarium was placed on a shelf on the back porch and allowed to stand, full of water, for three or four days to, what tropical fish people call, "age the water" before putting any fish in it. Once the water is "aged," it is good almost indefinitely without refilling, provided the fish and plant life populations are properly balanced. Occasionally a little water may have to be added to replace that lost by evaporation. Although algae or "scum" develop in stagnant water, algae-eating fish and snails prevent that happening in an aquarium. Among such fish are the "kissing gouramis" which swim about with perpetually puckered lips sucking in the almost microscopic algae.

Woods Are Full

or mantelpiece space for which the panel is intended. It may be a weathered plank, a piece of plywood painted or varnished, even a crude, irregular slab from a tree.

The plant material should be chosen with substance and interesting form as well as lasting qualities in mind. I will suggest some farther on, and you will undoubtedly discover many others as you wander about with your eyes opened to possibilities you may not previously have noticed. The pattern of a design can be greatly enhanced and "tied together" by the use of gnarled and crooked sticks which often are weathered to a soft gray or decorated by nature with tufts of lichen and moss. Old woody fungus growths offer great interest; many retain their original colorings long after they are thoroughly dried out. Those who live in semi-tropical regions have a wealth of exotic things, such as the odd "wooden-" or "frozen-roses."

What you gather may be used in its natural form, or you can cut and open it up to obtain variations. Slices of pine cone look like roses; cross sections of many pods show striking designs; wisteria seeds are housed in pale green velvet sheaths; many iris pods curl into fascinating shapes; those of magnolia are studded with tiny, bright red balls; the coarser grasses give an airy, light touch. For best color and lasting qualities, gather your materials in autumn or early winter after frost has struck. If picked earlier, seed vessels, in drying, may change form or even mildew, which naturally will affect and perhaps destroy the beauty of your design. With patience and a steady hand, you can get delightful effects with many kinds of seeds. Melon seeds can be placed to form daisylike flowers with centers of smaller seeds such as radish, for example.

Next, after board and plant material, you will need a "sticking agent." Any good household cement or furniture glue will do. If heavy pods, etc. tend to slip out of position, you can hold them in place with a flat stone or piece of metal until the glue dries.

And that—plus your imagination and skill (natural or acquired)—is all there is to it. So go out and try your hand. You will look at the world with new eyes when you begin searching for material with which to make such a simulated carved wood panel.

Some familiar, easy-to-find objects include: Milkweed pods; red-berried sumac heads; acorns, pecans, and other nuts; cones; miniature ears of corn; sweet-gum balls; cattails; pods of unicorn-plant (Martynia), magnolia, lotus, poppy, love-in-a-mist (Nigella), honesty; fruit of the empress-tree (Pawlonia), the five-leaved akebia—and, oh, many, many more.

PAUL I. DENNING

When Paul Denning was discharged from a Veterans' Hospital, after twenty-two months, he was minus several things usually considered necessary to normal living. The most important loss was his wife, who died less than three months before he hit the hospital. His home, business, and cars were items that disappeared during his hospitalization and—oh, yes—another important item was a pair of legs. But he had a wheel chair and what one of his friends described as "consummate nerve," and so he returned to his home town Concord, New Hampshire, to pick up where he had left

Paul Denning entertains two friends in dinette nook. Table is set at exact height to accommodate wheel chair off. The first problem to confront him was an empty house (his daughter's) where his clothes, personal effects, and what was left of his household furniture were stored. His daughter was away visiting, and for a month the mechanics of living and getting started again, on a smaller scale, at his old job of newsdealer occupied most of his time.

The big problem, which was a real headache in 1946, was house hunting. Competition was nightmarish, Paul's requirements excluded second-story apartments, and he needed a location near the business district. So he looked where others wouldn't and found an unused storeroom. The neighborhood wasn't exactly like Beacon Hill, but then Paul was interested in an interior that suited his own particular needs.

The storeroom had outside exposure on two sides. No two walls were made of the same material, the ceiling hung in shreds, and the wiring was useless. There was no plumbing and the flooring was loose. But there was about 400 sq. ft. of space, steam heat, hot water, and electricity and plenty of headroom for imagination, planning, and hard work.

Paul put his carpenters to work following his ideas which he had outlined with crude drawings, and on Easter Sunday, 1947, he was able to move into "The Shanteau" as he calls this hybrid cross between a chateau and a shanty.

"The Shanteau" contains a living room, bedroom, bath, kitchenette, and dinette, all well-equipped with gadgets. The dinette is only a nook between the kitchenette, bedroom, and living room. None of these rooms is exactly the same width at both ends because the walls had to be built out in some places to eliminate awkward jogs. The floors are done in red marbleized inlaid linoleum, and thresholds have been removed at all the doorways in the apartment.

The dinette features a built-in table which seats two on one side. Paul and his wheel chair reserve the opposite side. The table is 31 inches off the floor, just the right height to accommodate Paul's wheel chair, The table folds into a recess that has two fluorescent tubes which are controlled by a door switch in the jam so that when the table is down the lights go on, and when it is folded the lights

The kitchenette has a "Servador" to the right of the sink which opens directly to the outside of the building. The iceman, milkman, laundry driver, grocery boy all hold keys to it, so Paul gets his deliveries whether he is home or not. The problem of refrigeration, pretty well-nigh unsolvable in 1946, was met handily with a portable "pop bottle" ice box mounted on a castor platform. Cooking is done on a two-burner electric plate with extra assistance from an electric grill and toaster. One of his favorite kitchen accessories is a large popcorn bowl which started out life as the hub cap on a Mercury 8. There's a work bench in the kitchenette, too, where Paul writes, tinkers, or mulls over his coin collection.

At the outside door there is a periscope arrangement of mirrors in the casing that enables Paul to see who is at the door. He figures it's easier for a guy in a wheel chair to keep unwanted callers out than it is to throw them out after they get in. A large closet has been built into what was once an old cellar stairway. It is cedar-lined and can easily store a party table and other paraphernalia that go along with housekeeping.

The walls of all the rooms, except the bedroom and bath, have a paneled effect achieved by wallpaper with an inlaid pine pattern which looks like the real thing. Floor plugs have been installed 24 inches from the floor to make hooking up electric appliances more convenient for Paul.

"The Shanteau" is really geared to Paul's way of living. He has planned a home that makes it possible for him to live a perfectly normal, pleasurable life. He likes to entertain, and his Saturday night dinners are legend with his friends. A good cook, his specialty is porterhouse steak. He keeps his apartment in spotless condition and it's a testimonial to his culinary skill that he can turn out a really mean porterhouse even with limited equipment.

So you see, there's nothing to this housing problem business if you go straight to the heart of the matter.

"You'd never guess how easy it is to keep our oak floors so beautiful! And they blend right in with simply any style of furniture. I know from experimenting in our old home. That's why we got oak floors in our new one."

"Who, me? Sure. These floors are swell. We can run and play cowboys all we want. And when we get right down on the floor it's real clean and warm even in winter.'

"I'm interested in oak floors for economy. They're low-cost, and they last so long they hold the re-sale value of a house 'way up. I found that out with our last house. That's why we were part of the 85% of buyers who want oak flooring."

RUTH H. MORGAN

started housekeeping in one of the "plain, friendly houses of America" described by Mrs. Herbert in the May issue. I was a bride at that time. Our "plain, friendly house" had all the gingerbread and the white front porch with the high sky-blue ceiling. The trouble was, since I had to make a home in it, I couldn't just look through the small panes of glass into your ruby world. However, I saw red often enough on the inside, too!

The worst problem was the dirt. Now I believe I'm not an unusual person when I admit that I have no fondness for dirt in all its many forms-small boys often covered with it excluded. But how well I became acquainted with the unlovable forms of it, not only dirt from our own furnace and the accumulated dust of years within the walls, but our house was so chummy with all the neighboring houses that it allowed all their dirt to seep in, too! The window sills were part of my morning scrub duty -soot in winter, grit in summer.

The house was friendly in other ways too. Its wide pine board floors with a dark finish, which registered perfect footprints, would have trapped any burglar (you could leave footprints even though you dusted every hour on the hour), and had cracks wide enough for me to see my husband firing the furnace in the basement. Somehow the chumminess of this situation failed to impress me, so worried was I over the possibility of suddenly joining him without invitation.

Our house certainly gave evidence of the life that had been lived within its walls, too. Each time I heard the window panes rattling in a slight wind, I was reminded of the squirrel which former occupants had unknowingly locked in the house when they left for a two weeks' vacation. The poor, starved creature had gnawed the woodwork thin around the windows in his frantic attempts to escape. Those deep, ugly scratches on the floors had been made by the three huge police dogs another owner had kept in the house.

And there were other, even more obnoxious forms of life, too. We kept a big tomcat to cope with one of them, and many's the breakfast I've prepared with cat and mouse gaily scrambling around my feet. We used poison for those horrible "bugs" and our constant vigil kept them from getting ahead of us; but we never did manage to eliminate the moths. I could see the little worms creeping out of the baseboards every spring, and several times during the season they were joined by those winged ants we call termites.

I, too, have some friends. They were not versed in New England: but they lived in a lovely modern home -and longed for your friendly, unspoiled-by-remodeling, gingerbread variety. They sold their home and purchased one whose antiquity put mine to shame. It had higher ceilings, a fireplace in every room, and baseboards twenty inches deep. The basement was floored with brick and had brick walls, and the rats which inhabited it were sleek and long. Their last desperate installation of a "pushbutton" furnace, which eliminated the necessity of going down to the basement (since the kitchen was large enough for laundry and drying yard combined), failed to keep them warm as their friendly house shared its warmth with all the great outdoors. Their heating bills were prohibitive. When wallpaper was needed, it took yards and yards, all ceiling work had to be done by people who weren't overcome with dizziness at high altitudes.

Where are my friends today? They've built the most up-to-date modern house you ever saw, window walls and all.

I had a great aunt who lived in one of those old houses. It was loaded with gingerbread trimmings. It was situated on a high Cincinnati bluff overlooking two bends of the Ohio River which encircled the blue grass of the Kentucky hills, and the surrounding hillsides were filled with violets every spring. I loved to visit my aunt and threatened never to speak to her again when she sold her home. But, of course, at the age of nine, I failed to understand that it wasn't the house itself I lovedit was the marvelous view it commanded, and the beauty and charm of its flower-filled hillsides.

And, by the way, I'm unfamilian with a busy port on the Culf, but ! live right next door to those Indiana river bottoms where you claim to have seen those friendly old houses Mrs. Herbert. I certainly do agree with you that they are not wrecks "with possibilities." They are gray from long weathering and no paint usually aslant in the direction of the prevailing winds, their "Chic Sales" bent in like manner, and always high water line all around the outside often above ground floor level, when the annual spring floods have lef their calling cards. Shall we say the are just "wrecks?"

As for those Dorothy Perkins roses they go well with any home. Flower are not confined to periods, than goodness, and whether you own modern ranch house or Southern colonial, it is your privilege and pleasure to surround it with the posies which most uplift your spirits.

And those well-scarred gingerbread porches!—well, my children prefer trees. So we moved into the country where we have lots of them, and I can watch the antics of the young-sters through my window walls.

Now about those Franklin stoves! We suffered for two summers over one which was meant to warm our cottage on Baie Chaleur in New Brunswick. We had plenty of time then for all members of the family to take turns dressing in front of it; but think of the congestion that would cause during the early-morning rush of our working lives! That's the reason why we now heat with a gas furnace where a touch of a button controls the temperature.

Oh, you can have your family treasures in your modern house, too. Our hand-carved totem poles, Gaspé boats, Nova Scotia lobster buoys, British Columbia Indian dolls, etc. -all souvenirs of our "hay-fever travels" through Canada, have made themselves quite at home in our pinepaneled ranch house along with my collection of modern English bone china cups and saucers, our daughter's assortment of Toby jugs, Grandmother's sugar bowl, and Great-Grandmother's Sandwich glass cake plate which announces: "A good mother makes a happy home.'

It is therefore our contention that we do have a "permanent, friendly American home"-only it isn't filled with the ghosts of women who have worked themselves into early graves in their efforts to keep it clean. Our home is filled with shouts of carefree children who don't have to worry about scarring the hardwood, or any other kind of wood floor (they are all tile); nor do my children worry about leaving smeary fingerprints on the wallpaper-because there's none of that, either. We keep clean with a minimum of effort and have ample time to work in our garden and pick violets in the near-by woods. When our Indiana weather keeps us inside, we live outdoors through our window walls and really enjoy the rain.

Now that you've heard a bit about living inside one of our dream homes, Mrs. Herbert, if you still want your "plain, friendly house," I sincerely hope you find it. I hope also that you can afford a full-time maid, otherwise you won't get much living done with a scrub brush in your hand every other minute of the day.

ave vou ever taken a real good look around your house, eyed a certain room or corner or piece of furniture and realized that you'd either have to change it or go crazy? Or have you ever had that awful tenterhook feeling when a guest went to sit in a certain chair-the terrible knowledge that one of the springs would p-i-n-g!-that the sitter would be placed in an awkward position in more ways than one? Of course you have. So have I. It may not affect your life span, but it certainly helps!

But while psychology treatises tell you that action is the best policy, there remains the unalterable block, the inflexible will-vour husband! It would be easier, in many cases, to revise the laws of ego, id, and superego than to get the unwilling male to pay the bills for that tile-top coffee table or those stunning slip covers. Whether his defense rests on economic or other grounds, he is usually adamant in wishing to preserve the status quo, and any arguments on the subject of redecoration are hopeless and bitter episodes.

If, however, you bone up a bit in Male Psychology, you will find that the situation is not at all hopeless. The project may take time, but many a stubborn foe has been won over through a gentle, but subtle pulling of the strings of the ego rather than those of the heart. Without being a Madam de Pompadour, many a woman can charm a balky husband and even make him think that the projected plans were conceived in his own mind. You don't have to be a hypocrite to start your campaign with a casual remark like: "I need your help on this problem, darling," or "You have such good taste. What would you do?" You may even admit somewhat sheepishly to yourself that you are speaking the truth. For not only is the male taste in decoration occasionally reliable, but the wise woman also knows that she must consider seriously her husband's taste if he is to be proud of his home. Moreover, with subtlety and a little judicious flattery, the conspiring wife can gradually indoctrinate her husband to the point where he will claim that the long-incubated aspirations of his wife were his ideas!

Enough of the psychological approach! Most women are well-versed in it. Now that your husband has become shaken from his smug lethargy and is giving your friends' homes the roving eye, you can get down to business. In introducing any scheme, whether it be a master plan for complete redecoration or only a minor revamping, be sure to emphasize its functional aspect. Many of our best husbands luxuriously pamper themselves with piteous thoughts concerning their thwarted masculinity in a feminine home. It may be a case of too many ruffles, too many uncomfortable chairs, or just too much period furniture. Whatever it is, men feel too often that they have neither been considered nor consulted.

One of the basic rules for winning enthusiastic co-operation from your spouse is to cater to his interests. Whether he is an ex-football player who yearns for a chair that will soothe and comfort, an up-and-coming lawyer whose future may depend upon a dramatic and gay living room to entertain in, or a model-airplane builder who just cannot work on a tooled leather coffee table, keep him in mind. Any man will cherish the idea of a room built around him, even if his participation turns out to be only a masculine chair.

If practicality is to be the keyword, visualization must be your motto. Don't rant on frivolously to your husband about "gay little chintzes" or "Duncan Phyfe carvings." It will take more than a Queen Anne's leg to attract him, regardless of how well-turned. Generally women present their decorating schemes so abstractly and haphazardly that it is no wonder that their husbands are not enticed. If you are bent on recovering your living-room piece with new material, don't dangle three or four grimy 21/2 by 1 inch swatches and expect your husband to be agos with happy anticipation. Try to ob tain sizable samples of your materia and drape them on the furniture fo a more realistic effect. Many decora tors or department stores will len large samples. If you are buyin wallpapers you can take your hus band to the wallpaper showroom and give him a fairly concrete ide of how a certain wallpaper will lool These houses now have many paper on display and the salesmen are on too glad to open up large rolls the various patterns for you. to the floor plan with Scotch tape. Then cut cardboard outlines of your furniture, to scale, and paste them in place. You can even approximate your color scheme with crayon or water color. The Predictable Male will probably make the expected remarks about doll houses, but there is a good chance that he will boast about you behind your back.

All right, you say, granted that the husband is hypnotized into claiming that he always wanted to redecorate and that he concurs wholeheartedly with the little woman's excellent suggestions, what about the money angle? This calls for the most painstaking application of womanly wiles. There is no magic formula which is going to make your husband gleefully grab for his checkbook and scribble out weighty checks. An individual approach is needed for every male.

There is one powerful argument, however, which appeals to every Breadwinner whether he owns up to a roulette-wheel or a blue-chips philosophy of life. It is, in short, that a good investment is the best bet, whether it be in securities, real estate, or in the everyday furnishings of the home. So, turn on the pressure and use the hardheaded business approach to explain to your husband that the furniture or rugs or draperies which you hope to buy are as sound an investment for the future as the bonds he has so carefully put away. For while these furnishings of the home yield no money interest, they will more than pay for themselves in comfort, beauty, and durability.

If your husband still balks at the economics of redecorating, demand point blank whether he is a margin trader. Does he take risks? While he is still stunned by your offensive, point out that the long range economy and durability of the things you have chosen are much more important than any short-term saving. This discussion naturally demands some preliminary research by you. Of course you insist on quality in the pieces you are buying, but often, as the old phrase goes, "beauty is skin deep," and quality is difficult to spot. There are many ways of studying up on home furnishings. Scores of books have been published on the subject, magazines publish basic data on good buying and the government has issued a series of pamphlets on how to recognize quality. This knowledge, plus some rigorous comparison shopping, should aid you in your lobbying.

In this exasperating business of winning over the stubborn male, be consoled by the thought that nearly every man is glowingly proud of his own home. Chant the "Home, Sweet Home" song gently but firmly, and, before you know it, your husband will be harmonizing with you.

Greenhouse you can f I were to count the plants I grow from seed each spring, I could say that my greenhouse pays for itself every year. For Mother and Dad could never enjoy the profuse color we get in our garden if we had to buy the plants by the dozen from florist or nurseryman. As it is, our back yard is lined with 8-footwide beds of snapdragons, zinnias, pinks, double petunias, asters, and a lot more. And in exchange for my surplus annuals, neighbors keep me supplied with flower pots and other equipment.

It all started four years ago, when Mom and Dad bought our house in Hubbard Woods. I was 12, and I wanted a greenhouse of my own more than anything in the world. Since I was seven, I had worked in the little greenhouse of our neighbor, Mr. Arthur Wyld, who had taught me a lot about growing things. But for me, living in a rented house, a greenhouse was out of the question; I could only start my plants in a coldframe on our sleeping porch from which I would lower the flats to the ground with a rope. Mr. Wyld, who thinks there is nothing a gardener gets more fun out of than a greenhouse, seemed delighted when I showed him my rough plans for the one I had decided to build against the garage of our new house. He approved them, offered to help me build it-and did most generously.

With the war not far past, heating pipes and sash bars (which support the glass) were very scarce, but a florist who was doing some remodeling sold me 200 feet of 2-in, pipe and all the bars I needed for $30. Except for brick to match our house, the other materials (listed below) were easy to get. When the first load of cement arrived (on my twelfth birthday!), we dug the foundation trench and started mixing concrete on the garage floor and pouring it. On the foundation (when set) we used common brick inside and faced it with the matching harder brick. (I suggest that, before you attempt bricklaying, you watch a mason carefully; you might find one willing to show you how to do it.) Next, yellow pine made a sturdy framework for the greenhouse and the potting shed at the rear where I set up an old oil burner given me by a friend. Painting the woodwork and putting in the glass followed (each pane overlapping the one below by about a quarter inch); then the installing of the pipes, which was the hardest job of all. We put 12 along the outside wall and 6 along the inside wall. Then I built the benches (3 ft. wide and 6 in. deep) above them. It took me six weeks to complete the house, but it wouldn't have if I had not had to wait for supplies and could have worked other times than after school.

The first spring I grew some 4,000 annuals from seed. The next winter I was able to make a Christmas corsage for Mother from carnations I flowered in the greenhouse. And now I keep our borders well-filled with plants that give us flowers all summer.

ings outside the property line contributes to the appearance of the highway.

Now let us look at the six fundamental plant elements of the plan. First, street trees. They are a must for every residential street, and in the development of our plan the continuing of one kind through, not one, but several blocks would be desirable. If space permits, they could be placed in a balanced double row in the New England tradition; otherwise, a staggered or irregular file, as illustrated, demands less space, soil fertility, sunlight, and moisture. In all cases the lower branches should be pruned to give proper clearance. Red and sugar maples, various oaks, and plane trees are good for temperate regions.

Next, for the low hedge plant the ubiquitous clipped privet is quite satisfactory, but many others, not much more expensive, would add interest and distinction, especially if low and compact enough to use unclipped. Barberries, euonymus, holly, yew, boxwood, and flowering kinds such as deutzia, spirea, floweringquince, and (farther south) abelia, Jasminum nudiflorum, and pittosporum are all good. Any vigorous plant that can easily be kept less than four feet high and able to stand some shade is a possibility.

For the third basic plant materialan evergreen ground cover-periwinkle (Vinca minor) or Japanese spurge (Pachysandra terminalis) would be a good choice for the north; English ivy for less rigorous places, and for "down South," the neat little, drought-resisting lily-turf (Liriope). The planting of a ground-cover requires, of course, an investment, and its development takes some time, but no other garden feature calls for less maintenance, especially in shady locations (such as the parking strip we have in mind) where efforts to grow grass often cause headaches. Perhaps a gardener in each block would volunteer to supervise a group project of propagation, planting, and care.

Spring-flowering bulbs, especially daffodils, crocuses, scillas, and other almost fool-proof sorts (perhaps including lily-of-the-valley) would be a particularly charming feature of the plan. Planted among the dark-leaved myrtle or ivy, they would send their blossoms above it and, as their leaves yellowed, they would be less noticeable than on an open lawn.

The clumps of iris or daylily (Hemerocallis), included to give variety and color to the parkingstrip plantings, would present no particular problem of supply, establishment, or maintenance in most communities, and would add a delightfully festive note at the ends of the hedges. Also, if the latter attained a too great height, the clumps of perennials would not obstruct vision at the entrances to the driveways. As already noted, the small flowering trees are not actually part of the parking strip planting but tend to carry it back into the lawn areas. One variety, or at most two kinds, should dominate each unit of the plan so that a whole block or street would be unified and become known for, say, its crabapples or its mingled dogwoods and redbuds. But occasional exceptions of special kinds-prima donnas, so to speak—could be added, such as a golden-rain-tree (Koelreuteria), a hawthorn, a southern deciduous holly, or something else of special interest. The plan we have been discussing is the sort of thing one occasionally comes upon on "Main Street," especially in little southern towns where bridal-wreath or perhaps azaleas strike the keynote of the whole ensemble. Now and then a strip of English ivy is found between curb and sidewalk -a small detail, but strikingly elegant; dark and cool in summer, neatly evergreen in winter. A home owner in Georgia planted her curb strip with ivy then persuaded her next door neighbor to let her continue the planting across his lot front, offering to weed and care for it! That woman realized that improving that part of the public property (and her neighbor's) was one of the best ways to improve her own. It was in a little Mississippi town that I came across a similar strip brightly abloom with purple violets. The effect was charming and for so little effort! In Georgia again, I found lilies-of-the-valley used in the same way.

We generally assume that flowers in so exposed and public a spot will be damaged and destroyed. Perhaps that is so in crowded cities where many people grow up and die, literally, without ever having held a living, fresh-picked violet in their hands. But it is different in suburban towns where people come to know plants and flowers. However, I remember in so crowded a place as Jones' Beach on Long Island, a refreshingly genial sign which read, "Please pick the pansies, it makes them bloom." Always there is a tendency to treat with consideration things growing along a public way if one has something of the sort growing on or in front of one's own place.

In considering the over-all pattern of the plan, it should be emphasized that a few big trees within the properties and behind the houses, where they serve as background, are a great addition to the picture as seen from the front—that is the street—besides being pleasant to live with. All too often they are forgotten in our preoccupation with that insistent problem of "decorating" the front façade.

In some places, occasional benches of simple and attractive design might old hot water heating system to B&G Hydro-Flo Heating

You don't have to build a new home to have the comforts of B&G Hydro-Flo Heating! The same Hydro-Flo equipment used in today's most modern homes can be applied to your present hot water heating system. Thereafter, you'll have all the benefits of automatic forced hot water heating. Heat is supplied instantly when needed . . . smoothly modulated to meet every change in the weather. No chills—no money-wasting overheating. Besides, more hot water than you can use for kitchen, laundry and bath.

It's as simple as this —

First, your heating contractor installs a B & G Booster Pump. This is the unit that provides forced circulation under accurate automatic control.

Next comes the B & G Flo-Control 2 Next comes the B & Stightly closed Valve. This valve remains tightly closed except when the Booster Pump is running, preventing heat from rising into the radiators. Hence, it protects against an "over-ride" in temperature and also permits summer opera-tion of the Water Heater.

Your heating contractor will show you how easily you can convert to B & G Hydro-Flo Heating.

Finally, the B & G Water 3 Finally, the B&G water Heater. From this unit comes an ever-ready supply of hot water every month of the year. You never need worry about expense because this is the low-cost way to produce an abundance of hot water. Always plenty for automatic washers and showers.

be placed at intervals along the parking strip, perhaps where street cars or buses stop, or even where mothers out with their baby carriages would like to rest. They would add, not only convenience, but also an air of pleasant leisure to "our street."

Thinking now of the individual homes along such a street, back-yard gardens, completely private, can be delightful. But any space so set apart demands special planning and care to prevent its seeming a bit pathetic. The front-yard space, unenclosed or partly so, as proposed here can be developed far more casually and still be pleasant. And the group or neighborhood scheme does not rule out individuality, as the "Plan with Variations" and its little sketches show. In these suggested developments more diversity of treatment is possible with the unified park or sidewalk strip than without it. A higher hedge has been added along the boundary of each property. It might be forsythia, clipped along the driveway for convenience and smartness, but left to billow out onto the lawn.

The Joneses, we'll say, want primarily a beautiful lawn (their flower garden is at the rear), so they have kept their front yard open, edged it with a paved walk along the drive, and added a couple of choice Japanese cherries. Mrs. Smith loves flowersand people-and prefers to share the former with the latter. So she has a narrow flower border all around her lawn, and a small paved terrace where pot plants can be displayed and friends entertained. The Browns have children and little time or chance to keep neat lawn or plantings in shape. So they have a generous play space of fine gravel in front of the house, edged with concrete squares set flush so the lawn mower can pass over them. A large tree gives shade, and sturdy hawthorns or other small trees contribute bloom and fruit effects and are less subject to juvenile depredations than shrubs would be.

Any plan for a single street should, of course, be integrated into a general community plan. Broad, over-all planning is essential if our towns, cities, and countryside are to be made good to live in. But planning should also aim to meet the needs of the Joneses, Smiths, and Browns, Indeed, the planning for them-and by them -of the little area immediately around them is at the heart of the planning problem. If a few neighbors would start together, as here suggested, and lift their eyes so as to look just a little beyond their own lot lines, they would help the cause of broader community planning and meet our often desperate need for pleasanter streets to walk and drive along, and pleasanter homes from which to look out upon the world.

The Rowleys

In the Rowley philosophy, it's birds almost as much as flowers that make gardens satisfying. Oh yes, grass does have to be cut now and then, but summer work leaves plenty of time to enjoy yourself—and your garden way to watch them," he volunteered, "is from the screened porch where we eat our meals all summer. While we are at lunch or supper, we see the friendly little goldfinch at his, swinging on a stalk of mullein as he picks out the seeds. A family of cardinals comes right up to the door for doughnut crumbs and watermelon seeds we save for them, they are so funny trying to crack the shells."

"I'd sooner watch the nuthatch," commented Everett, Jr. "He is clever—he uses a crevice in the bark of a tree for a vise to hold the seeds while he easily and neatly digs out the kernels."

"He has another amusing trick," added Mrs. Rowley. "As he pulls the seeds from a big sunflower head, he nonchalantly hangs upside down, for all the world like a trapeze artist in the circus. Come to think of it, I imagine it is the birds almost as much as the flowers that make a garden so satisfying. They offer such a fine excuse for taking time out from one's everyday chores."

"Oh, yes," I conceded, "I do remember a few hot, lazy afternoons when we caught you sitting on the porch watching that conceited bluejay trying to get into your good graces by jumping up on the roses to get Japanese beetles. Sometimes you weren't watching; just sitting, in the hope that the wood thrush would sing his liquid, magic song. At such times even the butterflies seemed to still their wings to listen with the rest of the enchanted world."

"The cuckoo is enchanting, too," mused Mrs. Rowley, "with his saucy back talk, always reminding one not to take the world—or one's self—too seriously. And how about those long summer dusks, when flycatchers and swallows put on their show for us, darting and zooming as they snap up insects in full flight?

"But now," she went on, "summer is over and we will have to get to work again. We must get a place ready for some new tree peonies that are coming. Then we are going to finish the crocus path along the drive, and put a new snowdrop border under the euonymus hedge. And I think next year"—one could see her eyes fill with visions—"next year, I would like to start a winding ribbon of daffodils right down the center of the perennial border. . .

"But we were talking about birds," she said, returning to the present, "and there is one thing I simply must not put off. That is harvesting any crabapples I want for jelly. The cedar waxwing is an elegant and charming customer, and I love to see him enjoy the fruit when, in October, he stops off here. But I enjoy it all the more if I already have my own share safely stored away in the closet."

"My goodness!" exclaimed Marjory, who had been sitting silently on the steps with Rett during our discussion. "We sound like a regular society of bird-watchers, don't we? But really, after a city apartment, it is wonderful to awaken here to the soft notes of the mourning dove instead of the shrieking brakes and raucous horns of automobiles. I'll never forget coming down to breakfast one morning to find a stunning black and orange oriole and a beautiful bluebird splashing happily together in the bird bath!"

"A bluebird," I thought to myself. "The Bluebird of Happiness. I might have know that the place to find it would be right here in the busy, happy, lovely garden of the Rowleys."

covery. The composition roof—which had looked so firm on the clear, dry day when we bought the house—proved to be well-aged and was falling to pieces.

This meant that we must have an entire new roof. The project set us back $290, to say nothing of replacing the damaged paper on the inside.

And then came the winter. It was an unusually cold winter. Our rooms were equipped with small gas heaters—so-called "chill chasers." And during those wintry days we discovered another bad feature allied to city living. With doors and windows closed tightly on an extremely cold day, the gas heaters caused the wallpaper to take on a "sweat." The situation was so annoying that I ventured an explanation from a neighbor.

"You need a floor furnace," said he. Up to that time I had heard little about floor furnaces, but I soon learned that nearly all other dwellings were equipped with them.

Rather than have the wallpaper perpetually exposed to the ravages of "sweat," I negotiated for a floor furnace the following spring. The cost and installation totaled $215.

The following summer was as hot as an outlaw's pistol. We had a couple of electric fans, but they made little more than a ripple in this home which was hedged on three sides by other homes. Everybody else, so it seemed, had attic fans or window fans. I was told that the former owner of the house had used a window fan, but had removed it when the house was offered for sale.

This devolved into another major domestic problem. We must have a window fan or roast and suffocate. The fan, installed, sliced $98 more out of the family savings.

Several weeks of bliss went by. We were happy, and then—

My wife phoned me at the office. "The old water heater has blown its top!" That was the headline from headquarters. I rushed home.

It was a heater put out by a reputable manufacturer. It had been doing a good job of "putting on appearances" ever since we had moved into the house. I knew that water heaters of this brand had a habit of being guaranteed. I phoned the local sales agency. They asked for time to check their files.

A half hour later they wired back that they had sold said water heater to a family residing at our address II years ago. The guarantee had expired the year before.

We couldn't sell the old heater; we couldn't trade it in as part payment on a new one. We couldn't even get a junk price for the confounded thing. Fact is, I had to pay a trucker a dollar to haul it to the city dump. Before another day went by, though, a new, latest-model automatic heater was shining in its place. And it had cut a princely $140 out of our dwindling savings.

Worth $1000

(Begins on page 26)

Everything went along as merry as a wedding for over a year. Not a thing to mar the serenity of our citified composure. Surely our troubles were over.

It was a lovely spring day when I came home from the office early in the afternoon. Other members of the family were visting relatives in the country. I was all on my "lonesome" and was going to pass some time mowing the lawn and disposing of a few other odds-and-ends about the home place.

At the rear of our expensive domicile, a strange sight dampened my enthusiasm. What appeared to be flying ants were swarming from under the back porch. I had never before seen anything like it. I captured one of the flying demons and took him into the house.

There I pulled out a volume of the household encyclopaedia—the one that contained case histories and diagrams and pictures of all manner of insects. I was soon convinced that I had in captivity, not a flying ant, but a termite!

The yellow pages in the phone directory listed several termite exterminating companies. I called the first one in the book.

An inspection revealed that the under-portion of the house was copiously infested with termites, and perhaps they had been there for years. The company drew up a batch of blueprints sufficient for the structure of a city hall. They offered to clear the place of the pests, replace all damages, put in proper ventilators and other safeguards, and guarantee me "freedom from termites" for 10 years—all for $400.

The contract was signed, the job has been completed, and I have a receipt for the cost—another documented reminder of the high price of ignorance.

Here's some advice I have paid dearly for: Before you buy that home—regardless of how imposing and stately it may appear, check it from stem to stern. Find out all about the plumbing, wiring, heating, and ventilation. If possible, get the installation date on the water heater, roof, and underground piping. Get an expert to check for termites.

There is more to a house than greets the eye. "It takes a heap o' livin' in a house t' make it home," rhymed Edgar A. Guest—and, sometimes, also a heap o' repairs. New decorations on the inside and a new paint job on the outside of a home "for sale" may detract from a multitude of hidden sins.

I found this out-the hard way.

ONLY Superfex "HOMOGEN-AIR" HEATS LIKE THIS!

No torrid or frigid layers! No jumping temperatures or complete shut-offs... just comfortable, filtered and humidified warmth every place... all the time! This is one furnace which continuously delivers the right amount of heat... and continuously circulates and mixes it!

IT'S REALLY TWO FURNACES IN ONE!

In cold weather heat balance is constantly maintained by the high fire . . . circulated by the blower at high-speed. For mild and "in-between" weather, the balance is maintained with the coaster fire . . . circulated by the blower at low-speed. This two-furnace principle gives you wonderful heating comfort without wasting fuel!

Q. Which is most important in an insulation?

☐ Vaporseal ☐ Uniform thickness ☐ Double heat loss barrier

A. Be sure to have all three. In an insulation like Reflective KIMSUL*, the many-layer fiber blanket resists heat loss and the aluminum foil cover reflects heat back into the house. This double protection is the most effective method of stopping heat loss ever devised. Uniform thickness—to prevent thin and thick spots (a feature of Regular KIMSUL, too)—is assured with the exclusive stitched blanket construction. Unlike other insulations, thickness can't vary with age or because of improper installation. The aluminum foil cover also acts as a vaporseal to prevent condensation in walls and keep humidity at the comfort level.

Q. How soon does insulation pay for itself?

☐ 1 to 4 years ☐ Never ☐ About 30 years

A. It depends upon how much fuel is saved by the insulation, and what its other benefits are worth to you. A home insulated throughout with KIMSUL may save as much as 44% on fuel—so the insulation pays for itself in a short time, often in only one or two years. Meanwhile, it keeps a home snug, warm, draft-free in winter—up to 15° cooler on hottest summer days.

Q. Where should a new house be insulated for proper protection?

☐ Around foundations ☐ Attic and sidewalls ☐ Between floors

A. Both attic and sidewalls should be insulated to stop the greatest percentage of heat loss. Be sure, too, that the insulation has been applied in adequate thickness at these points, and around doors and windows. It must also be resistant to fire, vermin and mold. Investigate to make sure that an "insulated" house is properly insulated.

Q. Can I install my own insulation? ☐ If you're under 35 ☐ Never ☐ Yes

A. Many insulations require skilled labor and special equipment for installation. However, KIMSUL insulation is easily applied by the home-owner himself in either his existing or his new home. It is available in easy-to-carry rolls at lumber and building supply dealers everywhere. For the average six-room home, complete insulation with KIMSUL costs less than the price of a good easy chair (still less if installed by the home-owner).

FINE PLUMBING FIXTURES SINCE 1904

Who Said Beauty Is Only Skin-Deep?

The old saying that beauty is only skin-deep doesn't apply to Eljer equipped bathrooms

... the beauty of Eljer Fixtures goes far deeper than that.

For example, Eljer Bathtubs and Kitchen Sinks have a base of rugged, rigid cast iron, heavily coated with glasslike enamel. Vitreous China Lavatories and Closet Combinations have a surface that is actually a part of the base itself. All this means deep, lustrous finishes that will last a lifetime with ordinary care.

The styling of Eljer Fixtures is beautiful, too. All are standouts in practical, functional design that will add extra convenience to your home.

Your Plumbing Contractor, Architect or Builder will help you choose the exact Eljer Fixtures you want . . . in either immaculate white or soft pastels. For free booklet on bathroom ideas write Eljer Co., Ford City, Pa.

FINE FIXTURES DESERVE QUALITY FITTINGS

When you specify Eljer Fixtures be sure that you ask for Eljer Brass Fittings. Eljer chromium-plated faucets, showers, traps, strainers and towel bars are the finest made . . . true quality companions for your Eljer Fixtures.

It was Dad's idea to teach Ann the "how" of washing dishes. Technique, a little messy at first, improved with practice

Don't scold them-

ALICE GOWLAND

Teach youngsters the right way to do things, then stop worrying," said my husband anent the rearing of six-year-old Ann. To prove his point, he showed her how to use the stove and radio, how to wash dishes and dial telephone numbers. His idea worked. Ann was quick to grasp household techniques, now handles tools and gadgets like a veteran. She mastered the art of simple cookery, learned the "why's" of safety precautions like turning off burner before removing pan from range. This time Father knew best!

Tinkering is not for males alone. Ann likes odd jobs, installed new tricycle bell Pepsodent removes FILM-helps stop tooth decay!

Tooth decay is caused by acid that film holds against your teeth—acid formed by the action of mouth bacteria on many foods you eat. When you use Pepsodent Tooth Paste right after eating, it helps keep acid from forming. What's more, Pepsodent removes dulling stains and "bad breath" germs that collect in film.

FILM NEVER LETS UP! It's forming night and day on everyone's teeth. Don't neglect it. Always brush with film-removing Pepsodent right after eating and before retiring. No other tooth paste can duplicate Pepsodent's film-removing formula. No other tooth paste contains Irium* or Pepsodent's gentle polishing agent.

Don't let decay start in your mouth! Use Pepsodent every day-see your dentist twice a year.

How to get smoothest jobs ever with wonderful new NYLON paint brushes!

Dip only half the length of bristles in the paint. On overhead work, dip to one inch. Tap off the excess paint. Don't scrape it off on edge of can.

Nylon paint brushes hold a full load of paint. And they are ideal for nearly all finishes.

Use correct brush for each job. Poking large brushes into corners causes "fingering" of bristles. Cut in corners with small brush.

You can get a set of nylon brushes for every paint job, from touch-up work to wall and roof painting. And they made by leading manufacturers.

Local Color

stick to white and gray for body colors. But there is infinite variety in grays-why not explore the subtle contrasts rather than pick one safe gray and spread it over everything? There is a very distinguished house just outside St. Louis painted entirely in shades of gray-the body of the house is pale gray, shutters are painted two shades of gray, the front door is painted a very dark elephant gray with its beveled panels lined with persimmon color.

Even though the basic color of your house is just what you want and will always want, there is still opportunity to give your house a colorful personality at little cost and effort. Why not paint your front door a whacking good color? And paint the shutters, if any, to match. Remember, too, that it needn't always be the greatest contrast to your house color-far more beautiful in many instances are soft, subtle contrasts.

Think of your house and think of your neighborhood in terms of what color can do for them. Many a rundown neighborhood has been brought back to life, has seen property values increase, by just such community planning-and action. Why not be the first in your block to start the ball rolling? Mix well, and apply locally!
