Spray, Steam & Dry Iron with wash-and-wear settings!

It sprinkles as you iron. Just touch a button and automatically, a continuous mist of warm water melts away stubborn wrinkles. No tiresome thumb pumping.

And now, with three wash-and-wear settings (most other irons have one), you can safely iron Dacrons, Acrilans and other modern synthetics (see built-in fabric guide) without fear of scorching.

You can even steam-iron most fabrics safely and easily!

The General Electric Spray, Steam & Dry Iron is modern, beautiful and light-weight. Try it at your dealer's. It's the iron with three wash-and-wear settings. General Electric Co., Portable Appliance Department, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

FROM OUR HOUSE

Autumn in all its golden glory—with Halloween high jinks to boot

MARGY WYVILL ECCLESINE

What is there in the way of spectator sports that quite equals high school football—especially when there's one of your own on the squad? We've switched our allegiance from the pro and alma mater varieties to climb into the high school stadium with blankets and a thermos of coffee every Saturday afternoon. The stands are full of our neighbors, and the children find friends to pal around with. The half-time show of the two competing bands puts just the right kind of music into the crisp October air. It's fun to be part of it—again.

Welcome Aboard, Ralphie!

Our neighbors had to go away for a week and asked if they could bring over Ralphie, their canary. Amy, 5, put in her bid to be "in charge" of him. I saw her carrying the cage downstairs to the playroom, and later, upstairs, but I didn't pay much attention until I heard her climbing the stairs to the attic with it.

"Amy, what in the world are you doing?"

"I'm showing Ralphie the house."

HAPPY HOBGOBLINS

They've just about eliminated vandalism where we live by having a parade of children in costume at each school. About seven in the evening, there's another parade from the railroad station to the center of town. Then there's a party at the Y, and prizes for the funniest, prettiest, etc. The recreation commission has a stratagem which gets most of them home by nine, too—"The Goblin" makes telephone calls, and there's a prize for every boy and girl called who is at home.

There's always that last-minute rush, to get everybody's costume on, supper into them (they're so excited, and dying to get off to the candy), trying to find out who's going collecting with whom, and when they'll be home. Meanwhile, frantically packing trick-or-treat bags for the big salad bowl on the front hall table to be ready for our earliest callers. Then to make a fuss over them, and pretend to be frightened. No matter how tired you are, these are musts. The only way to enjoy Halloween is to put on the eyes of a child.

Costumes I Liked Last Year:

A girl who was a flower in a flower pot on her head, huge red crepe-paper petals held upright with wiring, her body swathed in green.

An octopus with so many arms stuffed with cotton that he had to be supported by three or four laughing friends.

LOSE YOURSELF IN OILS

Nothing like an evening with oils, turpentine, and brushes, along with adult chatter, to clear away cobwebs that have been accumulating. If your high school has adult education classes, and you can spare time, I recommend painting for complete escape. You can't draw? Just splash paints on the canvas—express yourself! When you later visit a museum, you'll see that you've become far more discerning of technique, and will return to class inspired by your favorite master.

Visitor to Jeanie, 10:

"My goodness, your sister Martha is as tall as you are."

Jeanie: "Well, not really. It's just that her knees are higher."

BLESSED BABY SITTERS

I'm giving a bridal shower for my favorite ex-baby sitter. Pat came to me one summer when I was near exhaustion with a house full of little ones. She won my undying gratitude the first day when she popped three of them into the tub for baths, without my even suggesting it. God bless baby sitters, no matter what age (the good ones, that is) who, with big hearts and energy to spare, set us mothers free for a while.

As for the others, who take the second word of their title literally—no comment.

Frankly, No-

Christy, 5, comes in at 6:30 or 7 A.M. to her parents' bedroom, wants to play cards. She is waved away.

"What's the matter? Don't you like to play cards?"

AUTUMN FEVER

This kind of weather makes me restless.

I want to be in Ireland, where the bluegreen hills and lakes, the white cottages, and stone ruins (as seen in color slides of a friend who has just been there) set my feet to wishing.

I want to be in Vermont, where the maples and birches are aflame on the hills.

I want to be in the Southwest, where the dry air whispers "stay—everywhere else but here winter is coming on."

Like birds and gypsies, I want to take flight and be gone.

Fingertip Pop-Up Drain makes such good sense in the kitchen sink that we can't help wondering what delayed its arrival on the scene. At last there's no need to plunge wrist deep down to the bottom of the sink to let out the soapy water. This boon to the dishwashing department is available on stainless steel sinks with single and double bowls as well as this three-bowl kitchen Cuisine Centre which has a separate fingertip drain for each of its side bowls. Where Shall We Hang the Phonograph? It's a good question. This new high fidelity stereo model can be used on the wall, as shown here, or placed on a coffee table or room divider. Its two doors are the speakers and they swing back or can be detached and moved away from the cabinet on 10' extension cords. The turntable inside flips down and pulls out for use, and next to it another panel tilts open to provide record storage. The handsome cabinet is finished in walnut veneer and measures 30" wide, 20" high, and 16" deep when the doors are closed. The doors are covered inside and out with grille cloth. $250. With AM/FM/FM-Stereo tuner, $300. General Electric, Decatur, Ill.

Joining Plywood at Right Angles is no problem with an aluminum corner post. It has open grooves on each side for panels which may be screwed or glued in place giving you a perfect corner, smooth inside and out. Grooved for ½", ½", or ¾" plywood, 8' lengths are $2.88, $3.88, and $4.88. Reynolds Metals Company, Richmond 18, Va.

A Broiler Element in the lid of this electric fry pan doubles its usefulness. Making a handsome addition to the buffet with its attractive side handles, it will broil a 11/2" steak to rare in 20 minutes. The broiler element, like the control, is removable so that both pan and lid can be immersed in water for cleaning. $34.95. Westinghouse Electric Corp., 300 Phillippi Road, Columbus, Ohio.

Prepasted Burlap Wall Covering is easy enough for the do-it-yourselfer to handle. Right in the popular trend for fabric-covered walls, it just needs moistening to adhere to any surface. Called Burlon, it is 38" wide, odorless, and comes in eight colors. This is the perfect treatment for walls that may be slightly cracked or crazed. $2.50 a yard. Why do more dishwasher owners use Cascade than any other product?

Recause Cascade eliminate

Because Cascade eliminates drops that dry into spots!

WATER DROPS See what happens when plain water is sprayed on glassware, silver. This test shows how drops form. These dry into ugly spots.

CASCADE But see with Cascade no drops form! Just as in your dishwasher, water slides off in clear-rinsing "sheets." Dishes, silver dry spotless, sparkling.

Cascade gives you visibly cleaner dishes, visibly brighter silver. You'll discover Cascade does a superior job of stopping spots (your toughest problem in automatic dishwashing). That's because Cascade contains Chlorosheen . . . an exclusive formula that eliminates the drops that cause spots. No drops left to hold grease and food particles or dry into cloudy streaks or messy spots. No wonder more dishwasher owners use Cascade than any other product.

No other dishwasher detergent cleans so well yet is so safe for fine china patterns! Only Cascade is rated safe for today's loveliest china patterns by the American Fine China Guild, whose members make Castleton, Flintridge, Franciscan, Lenox and Syracuse china. Their exclusive recommendation was given Cascade after thoroughly testing every leading dishwasher detergent. Look for their seal of approval on every Cascade package.

GUIDE FOR HOME BUYERS PART XI

DON'I BE

The American Home believes that every family that possibly can, should live in its own home. We are naive enough to believe that families are different, that each lives in its own way, and that there is a right house for every one. It would make us happy to think that every husband and wife looking for a new house would be encouraged in every way in their search until they have found the house most suitable for their family.

However, many factors put people into houses where they do not belong. Not the least of these is reckless salesmanship, aimed to make any dwelling seem the best house possible for any family. Since we know this is not true, let's take a look at the pressures that salesmanship can apply, with the hope that everyone will buy a house—but nobody will buy the wrong one.

Stick your head inside the door of this room where a sales meeting is going on, and listen to yourself being set up for the kill. A prominent home builder is talking to his crew of sharply honed salesmen . . .

"... our regular commission is one-and-a-half per cent. Now get this. If any of you men sells 50 houses, I'll boost your commission to a full two per cent. And I'll make it retroactive to the first house you sold this year. Is that worth a little extra push?"

How would you and your family like to be the lambs who come up fiftieth for one of these salesmen? It would be worth $2000 or $3000 to him if he could make you buy. In these times of difficult home selling, could you be sure he would try to put the right family into the right house? Or, would he keep one eye on that $2000 and call forth all the forces of salesmanship?

BEWARE OF TODAY'S HIGH-POWER SALES PITCH

These days, techniques are very potent and well drilled into sales crews. Every trick of the selling trade is being brought to bear, for many builders have some bad guesses on their hands. While most builders and realtors are honest and won't cheat you, there are others who won't hesitate. A builder who has a house that is below par doesn't consider it cheating to let a family put its life savings into a down payment—if the man and wife are gullible enough to sign a contract.

A few years ago—everywhere in the United States—people were so frantic in their search for any kind of dwelling that builders put up any kind of dwelling and sold it at a splendid profit. A salesman could be any ill-mannered slouch sitting with his feet on a card table in the corner of a bare model home, taking orders from customers who apologized for disturbing his lethargy.

Today's salesman is often more lethal than lethargic—a different breed entirely. He's a man trained by experts to drive home the sale—often kept in fighting trim by salesmen's compensation systems which reward the hard, hard sell. He'll pay pleasant-sounding lip service to your needs, but his real interest in you begins and ends with your ability to buy the house. Watch out for this kind of salesman or you may end up living in a house in which you and your family will be most unhappy.

HOW A PRIZE-WINNING SALESMAN MAKES YOU BUY THE HOUSE HE WANTS TO SELL

These sales operators are at their best when they can get you at your worst—jittery and nervous. If they can tilt you off balance—and they are skilled at it—they can make decisions for you that no one should make but yourself, regarding the house you're going to live in.

Rule No. 1. Don't get nervous. Relax. The minute you feel yourself becoming jittery, tell the man you'll see him later, and go off and talk it over by yourselves. Figure out which of the ideas you are forming about the house are your ideas—which are the salesman's.

A carefully trained super salesman makes $15,000 a year and up. To do so, he's got to move people into a lot of houses. Here are some of the basic techniques he uses.

First, through a series of planned, friendly questions, he finds out what your basic instincts as a family are—the things you really believe in. These he considers your weak spots, and instead of attempting to give you a true picture of the house, he emphasizes only those features which will play on your weaknesses. He takes great pains to conceal anything about the house which would not appeal to your family type.

Second, he struggles to create a sense of urgency, to make you feel that you ought to buy (continued on page 68)

The "Jacqueline Kennedy Look" in flowers for the WHITE HOUSE

Like any lady of the house, the First Ladies of the White House have always delighted in filling their home with the flowers they love best. Each has expressed her personality through the types of blooms she selected, and the way she arranged them.

Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower loved carnations, pride of her home state, Colorado. She kept sweetheart roses in her bedroom, and one or two orchids in a dainty turquoise vase in her sitting room. Mrs. Harry Truman favored 'Talisman' roses; her daughter, orchids. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who said one of the greatest pleasures in her White House life was the flowers, liked old-fashioned yellow roses, pansies, and lily-of-the-valley. Mrs. Herbert Hoover loved sweet peas and 'Ophelia' roses; Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, 'White Killarney' roses; Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, orchids; Mrs. Grover Cleveland, daffodils.

Now Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy is First Lady in the White House, and her influence on flowers and flower arrangements promises to be as powerful and personal as her influence on fashions and hair-do's. The new look in flower arrangements at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue is the natural, informal look. "It's as if a housewife had done them for herself," commented one observer. After the Kennedys' first Diplomatic Reception, the wife of the French Ambassador said, "You can tell a different hostess lives here . . . the lighted candles everywhere . . . the flowers done the way Frenchwomen do them—natural, loosely arranged, even a little wild."

In contrast with the massive, formal, hard-to-seeover banquet arrangements of the past, the Kennedys' first State Dinner table displayed small, loosely massed, casual groupings personally supervised by Mrs. Kennedy—bouquets of tulips, carnations, roses, orchids, and white lilacs in delicate vermeil vases.

Garden flowers—tulips, daffodils, lilacs, lily-of-thevalley, Shasta daisies, anemones, and Queen Anne's lace—all are in evidence. Branches of crabapple and cherry trees are brought indoors.

Mrs. Kennedy takes an intense personal interest in the flowers for the White House, feeling that they are a vital part of decorating. Flowers are considered, along with furnishings and paintings, in conferences with her unique Fine Arts Committee for the White House. The arrangements are executed by Mr. Robert Redmond and his assistants.

See how exquisitely at home Mrs. Kennedy's casual, informal, gardenlike bouquets are in their historic surroundings, as shown in these exclusive pictures.

In the Red Room, under a portrait of Andrew Jackson, Mrs. Kennedy places a brilliant, eye-catching all-white bouquet of familiar flowers. Snowy peonies, carnations, larkspur, and hybrid Shasta daisies are grouped with careful casualness to provide a fresh accent in this very formal room. On another occasion, a diplomatic reception, the First Lady chose old-fashioned Queen Anne's lace for this magnificent, richly furnished room.

LISANT

In the Green Room, an unstudied arrangement of fresh carnations shows Mrs. Kennedy's aversion to tightly massed or contrived formal arrangements. The use of four different colors of the same flower is fresh, imaginative, and extremely decorative. The Cézanne oil, "The Forest," is one of the new paintings the First Lady has added to the White House. Flowers come under discussion by the Fine Arts Committee, as well as furnishings and art for the White House.

In the State Dining Room, during an official visit in June of Japan's Premier Hayato Ikeda, Mrs. Kennedy decorated an elegantly appointed sideboard with this charming, unpretentious bouquet of mixed flowers. You'll see carnations, hybrid daisies, golden coreopsis, vivid gaillardia, and fragile baby's breath. Thomas Jefferson, whose great love of beauty is well known, seems to look down with approval from his portrait (by George P. A. Healy).

In the Blue Room, a glowing blue vase stands before the window, filled with a soft, feathery mélange of delicately tinted flowers—pale blue larkspur, blue delphinium, yellow hybrid Shasta daisies, and yellow carnations.

In the East Room, the sun filters through on a handsome urn that holds a loosely arranged assortment of glorious lilies—including auratum lilies, Easter lilies, regal lilies, Aurelian hybrids.

In White House hallway, our photographer was struck by the appropriateness of this bouquet in patriotic colors beneath a portrait of George Washington by Charles Peale Polk. Creamy white peonies, red carnations, delphinium, and hybrid Shasta daisies have a garden-fresh charm.

MAKE A HOOKED RUG THE EASY WAY

DOROTHY LAMBERT BRIGHTBILL

■ These handsome hooked rugs—one traditional, one contemporary—would be beauty spots in any room. Floral Wreath (at the top) displays exquisitely formed roses in natural red, rose, and yellow shades, accented with blue blossoms and muted green leaves. The background is creamy white highlighted with scrolls of soft tobacco brown. This design was copied from a rug in the Edna Pray collection in the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D.C.

Our contemporary rug, Concentric Circles, especially designed for The American Home, comes in unusual hues of blue and green that blend remarkably well with almost any color scheme. We feature this modern rug in a contemporary setting, but the design is compatible with traditional furnishings, too. We think it would be extremely effective in an Early American room decorated in the deep blue and striking green of the design, and accented with plenty of white.

These rugs with their luxurious deep pile are as simple to make as tying a knot. Even simpler, because the latchet hook, included in the kit, actually ties the knot. The designs are stamped in full color on a special open-weave canvas, light and easy to handle, and requiring no frame. The 100 per cent wool yarns are imported from England. and are precut to eliminate this time-consuming chore. The knotted tufts need no trimming. For lasting protection, the wool is mothproof. So for a little time invested, you can produce attractive results. For sizes and prices see . . .

DOES ALL THIS!

Wipes tarnish away chemically. Twinkle cleans by chemical action, not elbow grease. Even the toughest-to-remove stain smooths away quickly.

A gentle-to-your-hands paste. Economical, too. Creamy, smooth Twinkle is so much nicer to your hands than harsh powder-type cleansers.

Shields copper from tarnish. Now Twinkle leaves an invisible shield on copper, so you don't have to clean it as often between uses.

Latchet-hook Method of Hooking

Place a length of the precut wool, doubled, behind the latchet hook. Be sure both ends are even.

Push the hook down through one square and up through the square immediately in front of it.

Put both ends of wool into the eye of the hook and pull hook back through loop with an upward flick.

Tighten knot by pulling the two ends. For a smooth effect, work row by row rather than by pattern.

In the latchet-hook method, the hook does all the work. By following the directions given above (also included in the kits), you'll hook successfully on the first try. Since the rug canvas in both kits is stamped in full color, you just follow the colors—no charts needed.

THE ANSWERS YOUR QUESTIONS

Neal J. Hardy, FHA Commissioner

You have advised people to make extra payments of principal so as to get their mortgages paid off faster. But I have heard that to have a large mortgage on your home makes it easier to sell.

If the buyer takes out a new loan, it makes no difference to him whether your house is mortgaged or not; but it does make a difference to you. If you have a large mortgage outstanding, most of the money you get from the sale of the house will go to pay off the mortgage.

the sale of the house will go to pay off the mortgage.

It is often possible, of course, to sell a house subject to the existing mortgage (which means that you, as well as the buyer, remain liable on the mortgage), or to have the buyer assume the mortgage. But if interest rates have declined since you bought your house, the buyer may not be willing to take over your mortgage with the higher rate. Also, if your mortgage is insured by FHA, a buyer who assumes it must be acceptable to FHA as well as to the mortgage lender.

There is one consideration where a large mortgage might make your house easier to sell. If you have reduced your mortgage considerably it may be quite small in proportion to the value of your property—particularly if the value has increased since you bought it. This would mean that a buyer who takes over your mortgage would have to make a larger down payment than he would if you still had a large loan.

I have a mortgage on my home and also a remodeling loan. Can I refinance with an FHA mortgage and get 97 per cent of value as long as the extra money is used to pay off the existing debt incurred for remodeling?

When FHA insures a mortgage to refinance a home, the amount of the new insured mortgage is limited to (1) not more than the amount needed to pay the outstanding debt against the property plus the cost of repairs, alterations, or additions made or to be made to the property (under limitations explained below); or, (2) not more than 85 per cent of the amount a borrower could obtain if he were buying the property to live in.

could obtain if he were buying the property to live in.

Under the first alternative, if FHA valued your property at $15,000 (the highest valuation at which a 97 per cent mortgage can be insured) it would be possible for you to borrow an amount representing the balance of your old mortgage plus the remodeling expense up to a maximum of 97 per cent of $15,000, or $14,550.

But, if your present mortgage balance plus remodeling debt added up to considerably less than 97 per cent, you might prefer to use the second alternative. This would make it possible for you to borrow up to 85 per cent of $14,550, or $12,350. (continued on page 62)

REFLECTIONS OF THE PAST

American furniture reproductions you can buy

Forerunner of the authentic reproductions of furniture, fabrics, wallcoverings, and accessories, are the graceful styles from 18th century Williamsburg shown here. Painstakingly duplicated, these furnishings have been reproduced since 1937.

s the world spins ever faster, today's homemakers are turning more and more to furnishings from America's gracious past. Mrs. John F. Kennedy has undoubtedly spurred this interest along by her dedicated search for authentic antiques for the White House. And furniture manufacturers have encouraged the "all-American revival," creating finer, more accurate reproductions than have ever been available before. America's heritage of timeless designs comes out of the museums and private collections and into the furniture stores. From the exactly detailed, documented Williamsburg reproductions (pictured above) to a copy of an old pewter tankard, there's a whole world of Americana to choose from. What a perfect blending—today's comfortably designed houses and yesterday's graceful, functional furnishings.

Right out of a museum and into your living room or many young homemakers, there's a red velvet rope between them and their heart's desire-those one-of-a-kind antiques from the town and country homes of colonial America. In many cases, "circasomething" originals just don't fit into circa 1961 budgets. But today's manufacturers are becoming keenly aware of the richness of our American furniture heritage. They've gone straight to the museums and private collections and held a mirror to the past. More and more often, authentic reproductions and adaptations of timeless antiques are available at down-to-earth prices.

This traditional living room was furnished with reproductions of pieces from the famous Henry Ford Museum in Dearborn, Michigan. There have been nearly 50 reproductions and adaptations from this collection. The originals were unearthed in all parts of our country. Replicas, in traditional pine, cherry, and mahogany, include both elegant and country versions of Queen Anne, Chippendale, and Hepplewhite styles. Whether it's a comfortable buffet and hutch with rat-tail hinges from 18th century rural Pennsylvania, or a magnificent Chippendale camel-back sofa typical of early Tidewater Virginia, these pieces fit as comfortably into today's homes as the originals did into theirs many years ago. A Martha Washington armchair, just like this one, once belonged to American Revolutionary General, John Stark. Queen Anne easy chairs were often found in upstairs bed chambers in colonial days. The coffee table was adapted from an early 18th century New England stretcher table. The original of the Pembroke table, at end of the sofa, bears the label of Andrew Homer, a Boston cabinetmaker of the 18th century.

Serene and simple style of 18th century decorating in an essentially blue and white scheme makes for a relaxing room in the 20th century. Wood tones of cherry, pine, and dark mahogany give the feeling of solidity and comfort-maintain a slightly formal air without being stuffy. Blue Chinese rug ties conversational group together. Accessories are quite simple.

Lady's desk is as inviting and functional as was its ancestor in an 18th century American home. Here it displays antique pug dogs on its open shelves. Other colorful reproductions are mustard and red paisley wallpaper and spicy Spanish rug.

Sophisticated country comfort with cherry reproductions scaled for smaller dining rooms. These cherry wood pieces glow against a simple background of calico-like wallpaper, a white plank dado, and the subtle tones of an Oriental rug.

Warmhearted furniture . . . as American as cherry pie eorge Washington wasn't the first American to chop down a cherry tree. Cherry wood was discovered by the very first colonists, who had to get their furniture the hard way. Looking for a sturdy, satisfactory native wood for their hand-hewn beds and tables, they soon learned that the cherry trees in their own backyards had all the natural properties of the finest cabinet woods. This wood was strong, easy to work with, durable, and beautiful. The charming solid cherry reproductions on these pages are a glowing reflection of colonial America. Their simple, unaffected lines are easy to look at, easy to live with. The mellow wood is delightfully at home in modern decorating.

Wouldn't a lady's desk, like the one at the left, light up a corner of your home? The original desk, handed down through generation after generation in the same family, is priceless. But this handsome reproduction is in many stores, priced for young homemakers' budgets. So is the graceful accompanying chair, adapted from one in the Metropolitan Museum.

For today's smaller scaled dining rooms, an oval cherry table with simple Brewster-style chairs is a cheerful choice. Such chairs, with their rush seats and turned posts and spindles, were named for William Brewster, an elder in Plymouth in the 1600s. You can imagine what an original Brewster chair would cost today! But these good-looking, good-sitting reproductions are within everyone's reach. Notice how comfortably the typical New England cupboard fits into the corner, adding a gracious decorating note while providing precious storage space. The chandelier is an authentic reproduction, too.

The endearing young charms of enduring colonial ust one, good, happily chosen reproduction might be the shotin-the-arm that your decorating needs-and may be the beginning of a long love affair with Americana. You'll find that's the nice thing about collecting reproductions-you can do it piece by piece, just the way you would the priceless originals. Each piece should be judged on its own merits, as to proportion, function, and simplicity of detail. In colonial days, people didn't run out to buy living room suites and coordinated groupings. Furniture was made, or ordered from the cabinetmaker, as the specific need arose.

It's probably the honest, forthright functionalism of good colonial furniture that makes it so appealing today, and so unexpectedly at home in modern surroundings. Of course, there's "bad" colonial, just as there's "bad" modern, but with so much good furniture around at moderate cost, there's no need to settle for poorly designed pieces.

Informal, farmhouse-style reproductions give this family room a wonderful, nice-to-come-home-to glow. A pioneer family might have sat around on just such a red painted settee and highbacked rocker, warming themselves before the fire. The 1812 vintage iron stove is an exact replica that will actually burn wood or coal. The original of the maple washstand was found deep in Maine (the cut-out for a basin was omitted in this adaptation, for greater practicality).

The barn-siding wall finished in natural weathered color and the chicken-wire patterned vinyl floor tiles carry out the cozy country look of this delightfully all-American family room.

The simple, sensible lines of this painted settee, Boston rocker, and washstand are as pleasing in a contemporary family room as they were in colonial homes. Splashes of bright red, orange, and emerald green add to the charm of this informal room. There's an area rug copied from an old counterpane, and a comfortable love seat. A hooked rug is arranged with other decorations on the wall behind the stove.

Painted American Provincial

Color as modern decorators are. They loved to brighten their homes with brilliant accents of red, yellow, green, and blue. In many cases, the painting of their furniture was a practical necessity. They painted a chair to make it prettier, or to hide the variations in the woods used. In other cases, the colonists chose painted furniture just because they liked it—Lambert Hitchcock's famous "fancy chairs," for instance.

If you want to give your decorating a quick, littlemoney lift, choose a colorful painted provincial piece.

The bright red, high-back Shaker chair (pictured on the page at left) is typical of reproductions of the charming old pieces found at back country auctions and antique shops. The handsome blue dry sink was adapted from another old Pennsylvania piece.

The Hitchcock chairs around the quilting-bee table above are actually more than just reproductions—they're re-creations of the rush-seat chairs made 130 years ago in "Hitchcocks-ville" (Riverton), Connecticut—made in the same manner, in the same factory, with rushes from the same swamps as the originals.

Colorful as a quilting bee, Hitchcock chairs in country yellow, barn red, and hemlock green have a timeless charm. They're modern originals—gay, practical, and comfortable in almost any room.

Rush seating of today's Hitchcock chairs is done by hand, just as it was long ago. Many of the skilled craftsmen are descendants of workers in the original factory.

Conversation pieces from our historic past n 1849, the three-masted packet ship, Plymouth Rock, under Captain Caldwell, docked in Mystic, Connecticut, bearing aboard "furnishings and other stuffs" from England. Just as exciting is the arrival on the current decorating scene of myriads of authentic Early American furnishings-bedspreads and chandeliers, fabrics and glassware, barber poles and lamps, doorstops and tableware, cradles and clocks. When you've discovered the charm of decorating with Early American furniture, you can carry out the theme with important touches typical of the period.

You might choose a magnificent red "Newport Eagle" bedspread, copied in minute detail from the original found in Rhode Island. You might select an exact reproduction of an 18th century child's chair in a Hartford museum-either to sit a 20th century child on or to use as a decoration. For your walls, there's an abundance of fascinating objects-a tin Paul Revere sconce that was the very latest thing in Boston at the time of the tea dumping, an enormous wooden "watch clock" or whaling sign, an old print taken from an English calendar depicting the fruits in season.

How and where you use your trueto-history treasures is up to you. Beautiful blue and white "Woodlawn" fabric, named for an estate in George Washington's family, might be lovely for slipcovers and living room draperies, or you might quilt it for a bedspread. An eye-catching Delft plate, copied exactly from an 18th century one excavated from a site at Williamsburg, would serve equally well as a wall plate or an oversized ashtray. The great brass lock and key is not only decorative, but can be put to its intended use (you can get a smaller, extra key for carrying). Rich in historic charm and fine craftsmanship, any one of these beautiful accessories could inspire a colonial decorating theme.

Posed against the romantic past of restored Mystic seaport is this distinctive array of colonial reproductions, certain to cause talk in any room setting. Available in stores throughout the country, their decorating spirit is as lively today as in the 18th century. They serve as a complement to the new interest in American tradition.

ADD CHARM TO YOUR HOME WITH PLANTS

GRETCHEN HARSHBARGER

Picture the beauty of a flamboyant hibiscus blooming on a wintry day. Imagine sniffing the fresh fragrance of orange blossoms or a sun-ripe pineapple, right in your living room. Think of growing passion flowers!

It's hard to believe, but all the gorgeous tropical-looking plants you see on these pages grow wonderfully indoors. They produce fabulous flowers and fruits during winter, and they're among the easiest of all house plants to grow if you have a window that gets sun at least half a day. I know they'll succeed in average home situations, because I've either grown them or watched them thrive in homes of friends. In this article I want to give you tips on the care of plants, based on experience.

You can get plants from greenhouses, garden centers, mailorder nurseries, or house plant specialists. You probably won't locate all kinds through any one firm. Prices range from $1 to $3. Make your purchases now, because many companies won't ship plants after October. In winter it just isn't safe to transport cold-tender plants either locally or by mail.

General growing instructions are simple. Place plant in window with as much sun as possible (east or south preferred). Room temperature should be 65° to 75° F. Soil must be fertile and of loose enough texture that water can drain rapidly. Feed monthly with "complete" house plant food, following manufacturer's directions. Water thoroughly (using water at room temperature). Let soil become dry on top before watering again. Increase humidity when air is uncomfortably dry; set pots on a tray of moist pebbles, keep a teakettle simmering, or turn on (continued on page 75) a vaporizer.

Chinese hibiscus is the giant red blossom in the photo at upper left (it's a shrub often used for hedges in Hawaii and southern Florida). Shown with it are low-growing white spathiphyllum (a relative of calla lily) and a red variety of impatiens (used frequently outdoors as a bedding plant for shade areas). The bottom picture features some eye-catching vines: at left is the fragrant wax plant (Hoya carnosa); in low center is one of the intricately formed passion flowers; at right is papery-flowered bougainvillea.

It's fascinating fun to watch these fruits grow indoors. The enchanting little calamondin oranges (at left) develop from exquisitely fragrant waxy white flowers. Blooms of lemon smell heavenly too. The enormous fruit of 'Ponderosa' lemon (at top) will make two pies or a tremendous pitcher of lemonade. As for the pineapple, you start a plant with the spiky top cut from a fresh pineapple. The fruit that results won't compete in size with ones grown commercially in Hawaii, but will amaze your friends!

THE FRIENDLY HOMES OF

BUCKS COUNTY

PEARL S. BUCK

■ Bucks County has been here in Pennsylvania, U. S. A., for some 200 years, but I did not know it when I was looking for a home in my own country, after half a lifetime in Asia. No, not the name but the houses were the charm. I chanced to drive one day through a lovely region of rolling hills, rich fields, woods, and rippling streams, not unusual, yet the houses in this landscape were unusual. They were built of field stone, the color of the golden brown earth, shot through with shades of paler gold and touches of crimson. The roofs were slate and the walls were thick, and near the house there was always a great red barn upon which were designs in white. Where was I? I was reminded of vast old houses in Germany or the south of France, and country houses in England.

I paused at a gas station. "Please tell me where I am," I said.

The attendant, a cheerful pink-faced boy, looked at me with suspicion. Was I all right?

"Bucks County, Pennsylvania," he said. "But I aindt never had nobody ast me that before. Mostly they knows."

The accent was unfamiliar, but I identified it later as Pennsylvania Dutch. I had heard of the region. I drove on, my eyes alert now, for I was passing one beautiful house after another. I had seen no (continued)

HOME OF MR. AND MRS. LOUIS D. DAVIS

It's a lovely region with rolling hills, rich fields, woodland, and rippling streams

There are thick walls, many-paned windows, solid chimneys, and huge barns with painted designs such houses elsewhere in the United States. They stood as solid as castles, facing south as the Chinese houses do, and surrounded by big trees.

I had been looking for a house to make into a home-my first American home. I wanted not only a home, but a hill, a brook, mountains not too far, and the sea within reach. New York had to be thought of, too, for that is our business center, and I have always loved Philadelphia, because it reminds me of London. But the house was the thing. I did not want a new house. I had lived in old countries and in houses where generations had lived before me. I wanted again to live in such a house, my family fitting into the past as well as the present and the future, part of the human stream, this time of my own people. An old house, then, one at least 100 years old, one that meant history, one where ancestors had lived and died. I had considered a house in New England, a lovely place, and since England is a beloved land in our family, some of us even born there, I wandered about in New England. Yes, its houses are old and beautiful, furnished with mahogany and antique objects from my other part of the world, curios brought back by early sea captains. New England houses are enchanting and often elegant but-well, I have never lived in a wooden house. Our houses in China were of solid brick with a tiled roof, or they were of mountain adobe. I felt strangely unsafe in a wooden house where a misplaced match or a dropped cigarette could cause a holocaust. Perhaps memories of Japan crept in unawares. The fragile wooden houses there are built for earthquake, easy to escape from, but they burn in a few moments to small heaps of ash.

I spent hours that day wandering in Bucks County, stopping at one house after another, sometimes merely on the road, sometimes invited to come inside. I found hospitable folk, proud of their homes and farms. The houses were of two kinds, in general: the farmhouses, built by early settlers from South Germany, and manor houses, built by the early English. William Penn was a large-hearted man and he made Pennsylvania a refuge for people from many countries, but English and Germans were the builders. Their houses still stand solidly upon the American earth, white marble date stones set into (continued) the solid chimneys, announcing at least a century of life. All of the houses have fireplaces and big attics and good cellars, thick walls and manypaned windows and floors of broad pine or oak boards. Above all, they breathe the atmosphere of home. Not every house you find can be made into a home. Sometimes a house resists every such effort.

There was no time that day for further search, but I had my region. Somewhere here, two hours from the sea, two hours from the mountains, and two hours from the city, was the house that waited for me. I never thought, however, that I would find it so quickly. There on a leaflet in a real estate office in New York was a stamp-sized picture of a house standing on a hill by a brook, against a background of trees. I recognized it immediately, without ever having seen it. There my home was!

The next day I drove to the house and found it exactly as I knew it would be, a stone house, facing south, set on a hill at the foot of which the brook flowed. On one side of the house was a big black walnut tree, on the other a big maple, behind it the woods, and beyond it the hills.

"I want this house," I told the local real estate agent.

"Better look a little more," he advised. "There's others nice, too."

I looked halfheartedly, knowing it was no use, a waste of time. I had found my house and I came back to it and paid my money down—a reasonable sum in those days, as the house had no telephone, water, or electricity. But these were incidentals, only necessary mechanics. The house was there, fireplaces big enough to stand in, wide oak floors, enormous chimneys, many (continued on page 73)

Blue-sky kitchen looks expensive and it is. But stop and take a second look. It's loaded with ideas you can adapt, whether you have $1000 or $5000 to spend. This new planning theory, together with a little simple arithmetic, can help you do it!

Ideas you might copy: ceiling designed to provide even light and absorb noise; bonus counter space to help organize cooking, serving, and cleaning up; compact corner desk with comfortable stool; plastic blinds and wall covering for easy maintenance.

A NEW SLANT ON THE KITCHEN TRIANGLE

Whether you remodel completely or add improvements bit by bit, this new common-sense theory of kitchen planning can help you to realize the kitchen you've always hoped for

Built in the cook-and-butler era, kitchen and adjacent serving pantry wouldn't make way for new appliances, so owners remodeled.

Arrangement was a weakness here. Spacious kitchen had plenty of counters and storage, but also too many unnecessary walls and doors.

Counter-planning theory brings basic triangle up to date. Notice how sensibly range-serving and sink-refrigerator centers are combined.

DESIGNERS: RALPH AND JANE BONNELL INFORMATION: BARBARA LENOX PHOTOGRAPHERS: GEORGE DE GENNARO

VIRGINIA T. HABEEB

■ We realize there's room for change in this old world—certainly in the sphere of kitchen planning. For years we've built kitchens around basic triangles formed by range, sink, and refrigerator, and it worked well enough when these three appliances, plus a few assorted cabinets, constituted the average kitchen. But with improvements in equipment and demands for better styling, the old basic triangle is no longer quite adequate as a framework for kitchen planning.

For some time we've looked for a new principle of planning that would utilize manufactured cabinets to better advantage and automatically produce an efficient kitchen for the consumer—preferably a principle the homemaker herself could use to plan her own kitchen.

Just such a concept has been developed at the University of Illinois by Professor William H. Kapple of the Small Homes Council-Building Research Council and Professor Helen E. McCullough of the Department of Home Economics. Their new approach to the eternal triangle can help you, whether you plan your own kitchen or have it done by professional designers.

Quite by coincidence, this new theory is graphically illustrated in the kitchen of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Lee Kozberg of Los Angeles, California. Done by a fine team of professional designers, with the accent on common sense, this remodeling closely parallels the professors' recommendations for kitchen planning.

BASIC PRINCIPLES ARE THE SAME

As in years past, basic requirements for a good kitchen still include adequate equipment space and work counters, sufficient storage and activity area, all arranged for maximum efficiency. But in our new approach to kitchen planning, these tried-and-true requirements sound less formidable.

Instead of starting with the three basic triangle points, we now plan in terms of five types of work centers and the amount of counter space needed for each activity. Here are the minimum recommendations:

1. Refrigerator—1½' on the latch side; 2. Mixing—a 3½' counter next to the range, refrigerator, or sink;

3. Sink—3' on the right, 2½' on the left (for dishwashing, food preparation involving water); 4. Range—2' of heatproof surface; 5. Serving—2' or more, next to the range or refrigerator. If centers are combined, the shared counter surface should be equal to the widest counter in the combined group, plus an additional (continued)

Utility room, though separate from kitchen, has the same pretty window treatment to complement a new laundry center—complete with a washer-dryer combination, a deep sink, and storage space.

foot. For a practical kitchen there should be a total of 10′ of counters. Don't think, however, that it's impossible to design workability into a smaller kitchen with less counter space. The main point is how you arrange the available work space to make it most useful. A well-planned small kitchen is certainly more practical than many disorganized big ones we've seen.

WHY SO MUCH EMPHASIS ON COUNTERS?

Because they provide the necessary elbow-room to work efficiently, well-planned counters make a great difference. Since every counter generally is supported by a base cabinet, and a wall cabinet of equal width normally is hung directly above, a kitchen containing these recommended counter areas will automatically have sufficient storage space. Each under-counter base cabinet qualifies as a "full-use" base cabinet, as opposed to only partly usable space such as a cabinet below a sink, a corner unit, or the drawer or shelves in a free-standing range.

By planning a kitchen on this minimum-counter theory, we still retain the basic triangle, but in a more logical and up-to-date framework. One of the original arguments in favor of the triangle plan was that it saved steps in preparing and cleaning up after meals—provided that its three sides totaled no more than 22'. This is still a good guide for assembling your own combination of counters and work centers.

If you'll turn back to the floor plan on page 49, you'll see that the refrigerator, sink, and surface cooking tops form a very compact triangle. The total distance here is less than 17', with the mixing center adding just a few steps. Since baking doesn't require constant attention, Mrs. Kozberg's built-in oven was left outside the perimeter of the working triangle. Note the generous counter space between oven and surface cooking tops—an idea worth copying if you choose a waist-high oven.

LEAVE ROOM FOR YOURSELF, TOO

If space permits, allow five feet of floor area between banks of cabinets that face each other. This was possible in the main working area of the Kozbergs' kitchen, but impractical in the old butler's pantry which was little more than an aisle to begin with. To ease the space problem here, 21" deep base cabinets were used in preference to ones of standard 24" depth. Sliding doors along one side also help to save space.

ON YOUR CHOICE OF CABINETS

Several factors may influence your selection of kitchen cabinets. Mrs. Kozberg, for example, chose white metal for simple styling as well as easy maintenance. Even on a very tight budget, you can find factory-built wood or metal cabinets in various styles and finishes to suit almost any decorative scheme.

Next comes the choice of specific units within a given line. For functional purposes, include two base sections consisting of drawers—some divided for organized storage of cutlery, tools, etc. Since Mrs. Kozberg had space to spare, she also included a 33" base unit with slide-out linen trays. It is located, logically, next to the dining room door for table-setting convenience.

Adjustable shelves in wall cabinets are essential for storing items of various sizes. You'll find them easier to clean, too. The choice of sliding or hinged doors will depend on which you find more convenient. Mrs. Kozberg, you'll notice, has both—hinged doors on cabinets she uses most frequently, sliding fronts on those containing items she uses less often. If you choose sliding doors, be sure they are easily removable to facilitate thorough cleaning and reorganizing.

IT PAYS TO PLAN WITH A PURPOSE

Rules and theories may be fine, but unless you know just what you hope to accomplish in building or remodeling your kitchen, final results can be disappointing. The Kozbergs wanted ease of food preparation and low maintenance, which is simply another way of saying convenience and efficiency. Therefore, all surfaces in this sparkling blue and white kitchen are scrubbable. Even the vertical window shades are of a translucent plastic that wipes clean with a sponge. Abundant counter space, planned around the new appliances, simplifies meal preparation and serving. The central location of combined gas and electric surface cooking tops is handy to both breakfast and dining rooms, and so is the cheerful little corner desk.

Whether you remodel completely or improve your kitchen step-by-step as the budget allows, we think this new theory will help you plan the kitchen you've always hoped for. Before you spend a single dollar, think it through completely and determine what you want in a kitchen. If necessary, start with just one work center. You'll enjoy better results in the long run.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Dispel musty odors that persist in old wooden chests by putting camphor balls or flakes into the empty drawers. Leave them for a few days, with drawers closed, then remove. Odor will be gone.

Clean pewterware by washing it in hot sudsy water, adding two table-spoons of ammonia per quart of water. Then rinse in hot water and buff well with a clean, soft cloth. Tarnished pewter may be cleaned with silver polish. Avoid harsh cleansers or abrasives.

There's a trick to moving furniture. To keep heavy pieces from marring floors, slip a thick pad under each leg as professionals do. Thick folds of old bath towels are ideal. They not only protect the floor, but also make it easier to slide heavy furniture into place.

Here's a top drawer tip! If you have no space (or budget) for a nighttime bedspread holder, use the top drawer of any sturdy chest instead. Pull it out a few inches and lay the folded spread across it overnight. It takes no space at all, keeps your spread free of dust and wrinkles while you sleep.

Refrigerator defrosting is no picnic. But it is easier if you use an insulated picnic bag or basket to guard your frozen food supply during the process. Pack food cartons close together, with trays of ice cubes at top and bottom. Fill space and seal in the cold with a layer of newspapers. Foods will stay safely frozen for as long as it takes to defrost and clean your refrigerator. It's less work when you do it often. And remember, more than ½" of frost makes a refrigerator work overtime.

To season cast-iron utensils, scour new pan well with household cleanser, then wash and rinse. Dry thoroughly over low heat. With a pastry brush, apply melted vegetable shortening or vegetable oil to inside of utensil and inside of cover. Place in warm oven (250° F.) or over low surface heat for several hours. Swab with more grease occasionally. Let cool, then wipe off excess grease with paper toweling; repeat the process. Now the utensil is ready to use. If rust appears after use, season it again as explained above. Normally, cast iron will improve with use, becoming more seasoned and easier to clean.

Cast-iron care. Always wash cast-iron utensils with soap, rather than detergent, so as not to remove the seasoning. Treat burned-on spots with steel-wool soap pads, never with powdered cleansers. After washing, rinse well in hot water and place over low heat until completely dry to prevent rusting.

Use iron-on mending tape to label your children's clothing. Let each child choose his favorite color. The patches are easy and quick to apply, and they last through many launderings. Follow directions on the package for cutting and applying.

Be kind to your washer. Give it an occasional thorough cleaning to remove film that collects gradually on tub walls and under the agitator. Set controls for a 4-minute wash with hot water. Add a cupful of water conditioner and ½ cup of household ammonia. Let washer proceed through rinse and spin cycles (or drain a wringer washer and rinse with clear, warm water). Combination washer-dryers can benefit from this same treatment.

No ice bag? Substitute a household rubber glove, filled with crushed ice and tied tight at the cuff. Slip it into a clean cotton sock for comfort.

When washing brushes for hair or clothes, hold with bristles down to prevent "roots" from becoming soaked. Use warm water with mild detergent; rinse in clear warm water. Dry on towel, bristles down.

Ice cream in bargain sizes will keep fresh longer after opening if you cover the exposed surface with transparent saran before reclosing. It prevents ice crystals and loss of texture

Help for shoppers is here in the form of correct care information permanently attached to garments and fabric household items. It's done with pictures, showing at a glance whether the item should be washed by hand or machine or drycleaned, also how it is to be ironed or pressed. Developed by the National Retail Merchants Association and recently endorsed by the National Better Business Bureau, Inc., these Sure Care Symbols have been adopted by several progressive manufacturers of fabric goods. With the growing importance of do-it-yourself dry cleaning, as well as new improvements in home laundry equipment, we predict you'll find this type of information more important than ever before. Why not save this page for future reference and watch for these symbols in stores?

Fiber content labels, required by Federal law, will continue to appear on all fabric goods. The new symbols merely supplement that information and make it unnecessary to keep so many instruction tags on file in your laundry.

Here are three examples of Sure Care Symbols as they might appear on actual product labels:

May be washed by machine or by hand in hot water with any soap or detergent. Use bleach with care. Tumble-dry. Do not dry-clean. Use hot iron.

Wash by hand in medium-hot water, using any soap or detergent. Do not bleach. May be dry-cleaned safely. Fabric requires little or no ironing.

Hand wash item in lukewarm water only. Use mild soap or detergent. Do not bleach. Dry rapidly (roll in towel). May be dry-cleaned. Do not iron.

Note: "B" stands for chlorine bleach only. You can use a safe all-fabric bleach on any garment without danger of harming fabric or color. Always dilute chlorine bleach before using.

Is it true that FHA mortgages are foreclosed faster than others in case of default?

No. With FHA mortgages, as with any other kind, the speed of foreclosure depends on the circumstances of the individual default, the policies followed by the mortgage lender, state laws affecting foreclosure, and other factors.

FHA wishes to protect the home owner in every reasonable way, and will cooperate with the lender in offering leniency when a home owner, through no fault of his own, is temporarily unable to make payments on his loan.

A lender can wait a year from the time of the first default, before beginning to foreclose. In hardship cases, the time can be extended. At any time before foreclosure is completed, the mortgage can be reinstated (state laws permitting) if the home owner pays the amounts that are in default plus the foreclosure expenses incurred by the lender.

Also, if the mortgage is in default because of circumstances beyond the home owner's control, and if it is probable that it can be restored to good standing within a reasonable time, FHA may work out an agreement with the lender to extend forbearance; or FHA can agree to take over the mortgage in order to avoid foreclosure.

If the home owner is in military service, the lender may agree to postpone principal payments until three months after his military service ends; and in case of default, the owner's time in military service is not counted in computing the one year period in which foreclosure is to be started.

Because of these provisions, and the thorough review of every application, few owners with FHAinsured mortgages lose their homes through foreclosures.

I bought an older house, relying on the FHA appraisal. After moving in I found the wiring would not carry all my appliances and the oil burner had to be replaced. Why did FHA insure a mortgage on property that was not in first class condition?

The FHA appraised your property to determine that it was adequate security for the mortgage offered to FHA for insurance, and also to estimate the amount that you would be justified in paying for the property. The appraisal is not a guarantee against defects. Many defects, especially in older houses, can exist below the surface where they are not readily apparent.

I want to build a home and add on some rooms to be used as a motel. Can FHA help me to finance this?

You will not be able to finance this type of construction with an FHA-insured mortgage. The National Housing Act, which governs FHA operations, clearly states that it is the intent of Congress that housing built with the aid of FHA-insured mortgages is to be used principally for residential use, and that this excludes use of such housing for transient or hotel purposes while the loan is in force.

My neighbor is planning to build a home, and says that part of his down payment will be "sweat equity." What does that mean?

If your neighbor plans to build a home and do part of the work himself, his work can count as part of the required down payment, or equity, under certain conditions. FHA and the lender must have reasonable assurance that he is able to do the work satisfactorily, and that he can do it within a reasonable time without too much interference with his regular job. Also, the work that he does must be work that is covered by the mortgage, and must be subject to FHA inspection.

Work done under these conditions and credited toward the down payment is sometimes called "sweat equity."

My husband and I feel that, for people like ourselves who have reached retirement age, there are advantages in living in a trailer. Could FHA help us buy one?

No, I'm afraid not, because the mortgages FHA insures must be secured by real property. FHA does insure mortgages on trailer courts and parks, but not on the trailers themselves. However, FHA's program should help to make better sites available for rent to owners of mobile homes.

Halloween Is in the Bag

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS

1. Slit bag halfway up at each corner. Place on wearer and mark peephole area. 2. Cut out. Cut sides and back shorter than the front. Cut bag into wide strips for hair and beard. Curl strips upward and outward with scissor edge. 3. Wrap a 6" wide strip of yellow paper around the top of the bag; mark off needed length. Cut evenly spaced points. Glue or tape firmly to bag. Decorate with gold seals, colored toothpicks, sequins, strings of Christmas balls, or costume jewelry.

CRAZY CLOWN

1. Cut cap from the bottom of a paper bag. 2. Decorate with gummed seals. 3. Tape soda straws to the inside edge for hair. Trim these shorter in front. 4. Cut flower out of paper and glue to a soda straw. To make extra long, twist two or three straws together. Punch holes in hat and slip flower in place. Secure with tape. 5. To make false nose cut a star-shaped hole in bottom of soufflé cup.

MAD HATTER

1. Brim and wig are made out of the same paper plate. Cut a hole in the middle and sketch lines radiating from hole's edge to beginning of rim. 2. Cut along lines and crease at rim. Cut bangs in front. (If plate is too small for child's head, cut hole to needed size and tape on a wig made of yellow paper strips. Use rim of a second plate of similar size to cover where hair is taped.) 3. The crown is cut from a large sheet of red paper (follow pattern). Tape in place. Paint rim to match. Paint hair yellow. For decoration, paste on a piece of fancy paper. 4. For collar cut out a piece similar to crown but shorter and narrower. A gay ribbon tied under the chin will hold the collar in place.

The House You Don't Want

this house now, or you'll lose some real or imagined benefit. Whenever possible, the star salesman will relate this false urgency to the predominant family interest.

Third, he will apply pressures, often based on carefully baited traps, which cause you to commit yourself in ways you did not intend.

Fourth, he will bring you to a point where you'll sign, without realizing that it is a sales contract you've put your name on (even before you've made up your own mind whether this is the house you want to buy).

Fifth, he learns how to steer you past objectionable features, and his boss often spices up a house with mouth-watering gimmicks to draw your attention away from basic shortcomings in design and livability.

At no time do you realize you are having a house shoved down your throat-unless you stop deliberately in the sales path you're being led down and look for bad features.

Since all this is handled so subtly that you can hardly recognize it, let's look at some examples taken from interviews with home buyers and salesmen's reports.

SALESMANSHIP CAN MAKE A HOUSE SEEM CUSTOM-BUILT FOR YOUR FAMILY

A good salesman seems likeand actually may be-a wonderfully friendly guy. He asks you and your wife many questions, takes a great deal of interest in you and your children, your activities, work, present home, church, and hobbies. You almost forget that he's a salesman! But he hasn't forgotten. He's just loading his ammunition belt with the fire power he needs to sell this house to you.

Home sellers know that people hunting for a home are usually influenced by one of four major motivations: intense family interest, great regard for value as such, deep concern over individualism and good taste, and how this house compares with the Joneses'.

It takes a crack salesman only minutes to fit you into one of these classifications (and you'll never know he did it). From then on he sells on the basis of your major motivation.

In the Chicago suburbs, a builder had a split-level with four bedrooms strung across the back, half a flight up. Half a dozen steps took you to a hallway which served the bedrooms, one of the baths, and some closets. He discovered a costcutting trick: omit the wall between the living room and the hall, and turn the hall into a gallery with a wrought-iron rail.

The salesmen handled it this way according to each prospect's motivation.

Family: "Nothing gives you more security than the feeling that the children are asleep close by.'

Value: "We found a way to cut nearly $400 off the construction costs-and we plowed it right back into extra insulation for you."

Individualism: "This is our exclusive Gallery Living Room."

Snobbery: "The iron railing is an exact replica of old porchwork in Charleston. Much more authentic than the New Orleans stuff."

Do you know what it actually was? It was four bedrooms, a bath and some closets that opened into the living room. Half a flight up, to be sure. But the place is a madhouse for any family.

Yet the salesman made it sound like an overwhelming advantage by sharpshooting at his customers' deep-seated motivations.

The prospects, vulnerable to such appeals, accepted the sales pitch as entirely logical, and overlooked features that turned out to be impossible to live with.

Rule No. 2. Whenever a salesman seems to make point after point after point that hits you "right where you live," stop and think. Are these your ideas or his' Would you think all these points were so good if he hadn't said so'

Your chances of avoiding a house that is wrong for you are greatest i you go through the place by yourself. Then, if it seems like the sort of house you'd like, invite the salesman to help you in a more detailed inspection. You may find it difficult to make an unescorted inspection. Salesmen know their best chance of selling you is by going along on your first visit, to spoonfeed you full of opinions-which may not necessarily be yours.

HERE'S HOW THEY CONFUSE YOU WITH A FALSE SENSE OF URGENCY

Any salesman worth his salary and bonuses knows that he must make it seem urgent to buy now Sometimes urgency is genuine: families often need a home quickly. More often, however, urgency is created by the salesman as a means of pushing the sale.

A family in Florida reports, "We stopped at a model home and could hardly find a place to park our car. Inside, the salesman asked us many questions. He spent a great deal of time with us, pointing out this and that and how the house sure seemed right for our family. It did seem like a pretty fair place all right, but not just what we had in mind.

"Then the salesman said that labor was tight, that there were lots of people building right then, and if we wanted to get the kids in school that fall we better not monkey around too long.

"Well, one thing we were concerned about was schools, so we went down to the real estate office with him and he showed us a map of the lots available. They had a big pin marked 'SOLD' stuck in nearly every lot, so we figured we should at least make a deposit before they were all gone.

"We decided to build, but now we don't like it here one bit. Hardly anyone else has moved in, and the kids are lonesome. We should have taken more time and made sure. Since we built, we've visited friends in other parts of town where we would like it better."

A fair amount of skulduggery was at work here. The tip-off should have been that there were cars parked at the model home—but no customers inside.

Many builders require all salesmen, carpenters, and other company personnel to park in front of the model home, to make business look better than it is. It is done to create a sense of panic or urgency.

A second tip-off was the salesman's probing interest in schools and children's ages. As soon as he had established the prospects' high interest in schools, he created a false sense of urgency based on school opening. The prospect of children starting school a week or so late should never make you buy the wrong house in the wrong neighborhood.

A third tip-off was the large number of "SOLD" pins and the low level of activity around the development. It is entirely possible that many of the pins were purely and simply phony.

Don't be panicked into buying any one house. There are always many, many others if you—as the salesman darkly warns—"lose out on this one."

A family house hunting in Cleveland found a place that looked so good they went back a third time. While they were there another salesman arrived with a man and woman. The newcomers went through the house in a leisurely manner, barely nodding to the original couple and their salesman.

"That's pretty pushy," the salesman said, "bringing them in here while I'm trying to show you folks your new home." Suddenly the prospects thought it pretty pushy, too, and they decided then and there to buy the place.

The other man and woman, it was embarrassing to learn, were a stenographer and a bookkeeper from the builder's main office. The purpose of their visit was to scare the interested couple into buying now—before someone else grabbed the place.

As long as the interlopers are not presented or represented as prospects, there's nothing illegal about it.

Give a long cold stare to the salesman who says such things as, "We have our wallpaper crews coming in Monday, and if you decide today, you can have your pick of our paper samples." "As you see, there aren't many lots left with a (continued) northern exposure." "It takes time to find a house and if someone snaps this place up, you're out of luck." "We can't be sure these prices will hold forever . . .'

These are the silliest reasons for buying a house, yet every day they are the back-breaking straws for many house-hunting camels.

HIGH PRESSURE MAKES YOU BUY WHAT YOU'RE TRYING TO ESCAPE

A young couple in New York decided to move to Long Island, and picked out a development that sounded good in the newspaper ads. When they got out there, they soon discovered that the houses weren't what they wanted. Rather than hurt the salesman's feelings by down-talking the house, the young man said:

"We think the house is nice, but since we need a new refrigerator, we don't have enough for the down payment and the appliance."

(Now listen carefully, because this is a piece of dialogue you'll hear every day if you go around house hunting.)

Salesman: You mean that you've only got so much money, and you can't swing both the down payment and the refrigerator?

Prospect: Yes. That's it.

Salesman: That's too bad, because the house does fit your needs, doesn't it?

Prospect: Yes, it does. (He feels safe saying this, since he has explained to the salesman that he doesn't have the money.)

Salesman: If you just had a refrigerator, you could swing it, couldn't you?

Prospect: Yes, we might if we didn't have to plunk down money for a refrigerator.

Pow! The salesman makes a quick call to the office, and the boss says he's willing to throw in a refrigerator, free, for such a nice young couple.

These youngsters were pressured in the crudest manner possibleand it could happen to you. All it needs is a situation in which you turn down the proposition with a stipulation. Nine times out of ten a good salesman will reverse the stipulation on you and beat you over the head with it.

Here's another example:

Prospect: It seems like a very nice place but the powder room is awfully small, so I guess we'd better move along . . .

Salesman: You feel, am I right, that there isn't enough room in the downstairs lavatory-the powder room?

Prospect: Yes, it's a little cramped, we thought.

Salesman: Then I must have missed showing you something important. Come along, just for a moment, won't you please?

He takes them to the downstairs bedroom and opens the closet door. Salesman: This is a nice big closet, isn't it?

Prospect: Yes, nice and roomy. Salesman: Don't you believe that it's more important for a closet to be roomy than for a powder room?

Prospect: I guess so.

Salesman: Since making the powder room bigger would make the closet smaller, don't you think it's better the way it is?

Rule No. 3. If you don't like a house, be considerate of yourself, not the salesman. Just say, "We don't like this place at all." If you give him a chance he'll keep on selling you until you end up thinking all your objections are foolish.

It is, in fact, both unwise and unnecessary to voice your objections to a house. A sharp salesman can handle objections; he is taught to, as illustrated in the two previous true-to-life dialogues.

Some other signs of pressure:

Salesmen like to visit you in your present home, where they can appraise you-to see if you look like you're worth bothering withand where they can talk as long as they like. They know you won't throw them out, no matter how much pressure they put on.

When a salesman seems, uncannily, to know just what you don't like about a house, maybe he's one of those snoopers who keeps just out of sight but close enough to hear you talking to each other as you go through the house. You mention the ugly view in the master bedroom. Just by coincidence he mentions that a landscaping crew is coming in soon, to put a row of Lombardy poplars across the back of the lot.

As they drive you out to the houses for sale, they point out, "There's a place went for $23,750." "Doctor Soanso bought the brick place for $27,000 even." "We sold that place for $24,300 . . ."

Finally, he remarks, "You'll probably drop dead when you hear the price on this group of houses we're going to see.'

When you get there, the price turns out to be $19,995.

You are preconditioned to expect a higher price. The $19,995 seems pretty much in line, and you forget to notice that it's a junky house, and a barren place. And all those other places are not here—they're back there on those nice, tree-lined streets where you'll wish you lived, if you don't watch out.

Now and then they'll play on your pride like this:

"Of course, we're doing a lot of talking. Maybe the bank won't even approve you for a mortgage."

Your dander is up. Let me at that bank. I'll show you whose credit is good.

LEARN HERE AND NOW ABOUT THE "EASY YES" SELLING CLOSE

It is never an easy decision to spend several thousand dollars, and most people like to weigh the pros and cons carefully before saying yes. Salesmen are always glad to help you make the decision, of course, and they are usually trained in an efficient method of doing so. It is sometimes called the "Easy Yes Method of Closing a Sale."

It works like this. The salesman starts off asking a lot of easy questions to which an answer in the affirmative is simple—and safe. You don't mind saying yes. You do, over and over. Finally there is enough momentum built up so that you find yourself saying the big yes—without ever wanting to.

Here are some easy-yes questions:

"Do you like tile in the master bathroom?"

"Are the windows in the living room the right height?"

"Would little Jimmie's bunk beds go against that wall of the bedroom?"

"It would be best to put Anne in the room closest to the bath, wouldn't it?"

"Don't you think the third room upstairs should be used for your own private sewing room?"

"There is plenty of room in the garage for your combination power tool, isn't there?"

"Well, it looks like you folks would fit into this house pretty well, doesn't it?"

So far, you can say yes without much fear. But if you say yes to the next type of question, you may find it embarrassing to back out of buying the house.

It is always the trick to attempt to close the sale on either-or decisions.

"Shall we put your name down for the brown ranch or the halfbrick split?"

"Do you want to move in before Christmas or after the first of the year?"

Here's a dandy:

"Do you want to decide today, or the first of the week?" Notice that the well-trained salesman avoids the word "buy" and the word "contract." These are red-light words, and they tend to warn you off. Yet you must face them.

When the man "puts your name down" he is probably filling out a sales contract. Whether he calls it a "form" or "the paper" or "this sheet," when he asks you to sign it, he wants you to commit yourself.

Sometimes home selling organizations have "lot reservation" forms or "color preference" sheets or "construction priority" forms which they will ask you to sign. These usually aren't commitments of any sort. Signing them may do no harm. They usually say something innocuous like, "If we build, we'd like the house painted green with brown shutters."

Signing them actually does no good, either. However, builders have found that a prospect's signature on any kind of a sheet of paper tends to commit the prospect in his own mind, and that a very high percentage of signers become buyers, eventually signing the real sales contract.

Rule No. 4. Don't sign anything until you have decided to buy, and then don't dignify with your signature anything but legal instruments of the sale. (You know, of course, that it is unwise to put any money down on a "contingency" basis; if you intend to buy, put some "earnest money" down, but if you are in doubt, don't part with any money until you are sure.

HOW TO KEEP FROM BUYING A DOG HOUSE

A "dog" house, in home-builder parlance, is a house that won't sell. All around it the houses are taken. But it stands there. Very often there is nothing wrong with it. Other times it stands empty because every one of a hundred or so buyers has found it wanting in some respect. You may be sure that the builder is trying very, very hard to sell it. Bonuses to salesmen or other pressures are being brought to bear. All possible means are being exerted to camouflage the reasons why the house is a dog.

Since a dog house is, therefore, sometimes a little hard to recognize, be suspicious if a salesman seems to keep swinging you back to a given house, if he keeps making it easier to buy this certain house than any other.

but for financial reasons couldn't build. Last spring they went to a large development and said they wanted a house but would have to trade in a lot as down payment.

"Sure," the salesman said. "Let me show you a house . . ."

They liked the actual house, but told the salesman that they didn't like its location so far down at the end of a street. There were other identical houses closer to the center of things but the man wouldn't show them.

"You want to trade in a lot; this is the only house we can deal on. To tell you the truth, we put it up before the prices went up on framing lumber, and that gives us a little cushion. So take it or leave it."

They took it. And in the ensuing months, the builder lined the streets with tiny two-bedroom hovels that dragged the value of their house down at least $1500. It was a dog—but the only way you could tell it was by suspecting the salesman's insistence.

Sometimes a builder offers better financing on one house than on any other. Be suspicious.

Sometimes a builder will put a house on a certain lot—but not on any other. Be suspicious. There are "dog" lots, too.

Sometimes a house seems overly well groomed, with a little better landscaping, a little more wall-paper, a little nicer fixtures. Buy it with your eyes open wide; it may be dressed up to put a smoke screen in front of true—and serious—shortcomings.

Be suspicious, also, if the salesman sends you to a neighbor for an opinion. The neighbor is sure to be friendly (the salesman is no dope, you know), and in many cases builders actually pay for high-praise testimonials to push the sale of a dog house.

GLAMOUR AND "CURB APPEAL" CAN WARP YOUR JUDGMENT

In the West there is a builder who has all his salesmen driving a certain "prestige" make and model of automobile. In the East there is one who puts genuine antiques in his model homes. In the South a builder puts a cellaret on view in a corner of the dining room, complete with vintage wine, age-labeled Scotch, premium-priced bourbon.

Throughout the land, model homes are decorated not to reflect the level of living in the neighborhood, but to create desire of ownership. There are even decorating firms that specialize in model homes to make you wish you had "a place like this."

Nine times out of ten you couldn't afford the furnishings they show, and almost as often you'd feel uncomfortable with them. But they are glamourous. And they do make you think the house is wonderful. They make you forget the fact that you've got to move into it with your own things.

Even before you go into the model home, you'll notice such things as a de luxe brick planter across the front, window boxes bright with flowers, an outdoor barbecue showing around the end of the house, a rich-as-velvet brick driveway, a sycamore you can see over the roof.

This is curb appeal. It makes you want to go in. It is not part of the house you'll buy. It is window dressing only. Combined with the essence of elegance inside, it warps your judgment. You find yourself itching to buy the house as it is furnished—when what you'll get is a house bare.

Builders know that women exert a tremendous influence in the purchase of a home—which is entirely as it should be. They know, also, that women love beautiful kitchens and bathrooms.

Everywhere you go, you find builders who cut corners in living rooms, bedrooms, family rooms, lot size, design niceties-so they can throw a little extra money into the kitchen and the master bathroom. De luxe fixtures, built-in appliances, glamour vinyl on the floor, wall-to-wall lighting in the ceiling, a planter full of African violets beneath the mirror. These things are nice to have. But while you're drooling over them, are you missing the shortcomings of the place-the too-small rooms, the bad traffic pattern, the inaccessible closet space, the basement with no outside door, the garage that's too short for anything un-compact.

Rule No. 5. Visualize the place with your furnishings and your family in it. "Live" the house in your mind for a typical day, to be sure you're buying a house you can really live in, not a hodgepodge of areas that don't add up to home.

One thing more . . . if one of your neighbors should call you up tonight and say, "I hear you're moving out to Lackluster Valley! Congratulations!", don't be surprised. One of the neatest tricks the salesmen have is to "leak" the news around the neighborhood that you're "moving up."

It's hard to disappoint all your friends, so score one more for the salesman who knows that, really, the right person for the house is the first person to show up with a down payment.

THE END

Homes of Bucks County

"I found my house exactly as I knew it would be," says Pearl Buck, "a stone house, facing south, set on a hill at the foot of which the brook flowed. On one side of the house was a big black walnut tree, on the other a big maple, behind it the woods, and beyond it the hills."

windows, a farmhouse deep through the middle and easily added to, as the family grew. There was the look of home about it, too, although, the agent told me, no one had lived in it for 17 years. It had been a home from its beginning. On the main chimney a white marble inset gave the date, 1830, and beneath it the initials of the first owners, the ones who built the house. Later we found the names when we opened the panel of a door and found penciled upon its unpainted surface:

"I, Joseph Housekeeper, made and worked this door. August 12 I married mytruelove, Magdaleine."

Time passed and we made it into our home. I have read many books by disappointed city dwellers who moved to the country, books that tell of the difficulties and annoyances of country living, books that end by the people moving back to the conveniences of the city. I can only say that none of these difficulties have been mine. The house accepts everything we give it. It grew, it became warm and comfortable and colorful. The dark beams drink in the colors of curtains and carpets and bowls of flowers and fruit. The furniture is robust. We cannot use mahogany and lace. The house is too strong for delicate graces. We have lived here now for a quarter of a century, and my roots have grown deep. The neighborhood suits the house. They are strong, good people of kind heart.

Yet my house is only one of many, some of them much more handsome and more stately. My house looks well worn now. Dozens of children, my own and others, have raced through its halls and rooms on their way back and forth to the swimming pool and tennis court and barn, not to mention the more mundane business of school and office. I cannot redecorate, even now when the children are grown, for they make great outcry that the house must remain exactly as it has always been for their children. I enjoy my friends' houses, therefore, those which are more carefully planned than mine, more beautiful in detail, although loyally I continue to like my own best. They all have the same atmosphere. the feeling of permanence which only age can give, the noble air of satisfaction in having lived largely, in space as well as grace.

We even have a ghost, as all old houses in our region have. They are seldom ghosts of (continued) beautiful young girls, I regret to say. Ours is the ghost of a stubborn Pennsylvania Dutchman, known as Devil Harry, famous for his tricks and ways of getting ahead in the world. He walks, an old neighbor told me, every Christmas Eve, from our red barn down to the stone bridge over the brook. Is it true? I am not a seer of ghosts myself, though I wish I were, for it would add interest to life, but my neighbor is-or was, poor soul, for he has become a ghost himself at the age of 77.

"My house looks well worn now. Dozens of children, my own and others, have raced through its rooms on their way back and forth to the swimming pool and tennis court and barn."

One can believe anything, as a matter of fact, about our old houses. The walls are so thick, the cellars so vast and dim, the attics spacious, the beams of oak are well-nigh a foot in diameter-at least the heavy thunder beam that runs east and west through the whole house. Windows, as I said, are many-paned, and the glass is old and iridescent and the doors are the Dutch doors, the upper half swinging free from the lower half, a fine way to keep toddlers in the house and pigs and fowls out. The meadows spread gently down the slopes of the hills and Guernsey cows munch the grass until the sun rises high and they lie in the shade of the sycamore.

A sycamore belongs with every Pennsylvania stone house, too; not the dapper white trees of the city. but great old gnarled crooked sycamores, tents of big green leaves in the summer and ghostly old shapes in the winter. They grow fast. The sycamore we planted at the edge of our terrace 20 years ago is a foot and a half in diameter. The bark peels off like a snake's skin every summer and reveals the satin-soft new bark.

The friendly houses of Pennsylvania-yes, that is what they are. They are not elegant like the houses on plantations in the South, nor do they have the white beauty of the mansions in New England. But they endure. They were built for generations and for eternity, in the days when those two words seemed certainties. They have a noble history, whether they sheltered a farmer's family or the sons of William Penn and their progeny. They are solid and strong, and within their rooms-cool in summer and warm in winter-one finds shelter and peace for body and mind, even today, and perhaps tomorrow. As long as any house made with hands endures, these will endure against time and against destruction.

WHERE TO BUY SILICA GEL

Since the article on dried flowers appeared in our August issue, we have had thousands of inquiries from readers asking where to buy silica gel, the chemical agent used to dry them. The two types of silica gel described in the article are now being blended and packaged as a commercial product (such as Flower Dri) and are available at most stores where garden supplies are sold.

You can also buy the two types of silica gel in the amounts described in The American Home article from your local chemical distributor. Price may vary according to locale.

TRICKS TO TRY WITH FRUITS

To start a pineapple plant, cut leaf rosette from the top of a fruit at the joining point. Peel away adhering flesh and lowest small leaves to expose stem end. Let cut dry a day. Then place firmly in damp sand in flower pot.

Lemon and orange plants should be hand pollinated to insure the development of fruit. With an artist's brush, transfer the yellow pollen of one flower to the stigma at the center of another.

It takes five to eight weeks for the top of a pineapple to develop roots, according to Walter Singer, foliage-plant expert formerly with New York Botanical Garden. Then it should be potted in loose, fast-draining soil. Place in a warm sunny window for winter. In summer put outdoors in a sunny place and keep generously watered. Since pineapple plants like heat, they'll probably do best in climates where night temperatures are warm. In autumn bring the plant indoors. Flowers and fruits remain decorative a long time.

Handle all kinds of dwarf citrus plants the same. Those you buy, grown from cuttings or grafts, flower within a few months. Plants from seeds won't bloom for seven to ten years. Peggie Schulz, author of several books on house plants, recommends hand pollinating indoor flowers (see above) and says that when successful, small green fruits start to form in three days. On her lemon plant, the strongest fruits ripen in about five months. She puts plants outdoors in a sheltered place for summer. When brought inside they shed leaves but quickly grow new ones. If foliage becomes chlorotic (yellow-looking), Peggie alternates usual feedings with one containing chelated iron.

Vines are entrancing for many reasons. With bougainvillaea, for instance, the true flowers are tiny inconspicuous trumpets in the center of three colorful bracts (you can see them in our color photo). Because blooms develop on new growth arising from older stems,

VINES IN CONGENIAL SURROUNDINGS

This pink bougainvillea lives year round in the east window of the Herbert Spitzers' dining room. It's pinned to the valance, and blooms profusely December to May. During winter it has full sun. In summer a Venetian blind gives some shade.

Passion flower (left) and waxplant (right) grow in the same sunny south window at the home of Grace and Forrest Allen. Grace says she's tried waxplants in many light situations and they won't bloom without sunshine. This plant never stops flowering, though its main show is early spring.

plants can be pruned severely. Even small vines flower. My plant blooms almost constantly, indoors in winter and outdoors in summer, because as soon as a cluster of flowers withers and falls, I cut that shoot back to near main stem to induce new growth. Cuttings of mature (brown, hard) wood will root in water.

Passion flower comes in several varieties with differently colored, intricately patterned flowers. The one in our picture is caerulea. Vines bud as days lengthen in late winter. Each blossom lasts a day, but there are dozens of buds to open in sequence. In summer set the plant in sunny ground outdoors, preferably near a fence where it can climb. In fall, cuttings rooted in water can be planted three in a pot.

With a waxplant, never cut off the short spurs on which flowers are carried; new blossoms come on those same spurs every year. Feed and water in spring and summer, but let plant rest, nearly dry, during early winter. Cuttings root in water, but may be slow to bloom.

You can have enormous-flowered hibiscus in white. red, yellow, or pink, single-flowered or double! Plants bloom when small, and grow very fast. They need large amounts of water, often daily in sunny weather. Each flower lasts a day, but buds keep forming at branch tips. For summer, cut stems back to near main trunk, and move pot to sunny place outdoors. There'll soon be new buds galore. Prune before bringing indoors in fall.

Spathiphyllum blooms heaviest in spring, but continues into September. Leaves are decorative all year. and excellent for flower arrangements. Of all the plants in the group we're showing, this is the only one that does not like to be in direct sunlight. Yet it must have bright, diffused light to flower. Keep soil moist but not wet. Summers, put pot outdoors in shade.

Impatiens (patience plant or busy lizzie) never stops flowering. You can start them from seed, or buy plants. They come in white, pink, or scarlet. They like winter sunshine, but a shady protected place in summer.

If insects or disease attack: Treat with one of the aerosol sprays prepared especially for house plants.

EACH PLANT HAS PERSONALITY

Spathiphyllum likes humidityall you can give it, because it's a native of tropical forests and river banks. Set its pot on moist pebbles, or inside another container lined with damp sphagnum moss.

Hibiscus needs lots of sunshine to bloom well. This fine plant flowers constantly in an east-andsouth corner window in the home of the C. Woody Thompsons.

Cuttings of impatiens root easily in water. Use leafy branches about 4" to 6" long, cut just below a node (spot where leaves attach). Remove foliage below water line.

Will you build a 1940 house in 1962?

In the 1940's very few houses were built with central air conditioning—mainly because the cost of cooling was three times as much as it is now.

Today Carrier air conditioning in an average custombuilt, three-bedroom house costs about $800 more than heating alone. This adds only a few dollars a month to your mortgage payments.

Does $800 sound surprisingly low? It is. Carrier central air conditioning is one of the few quality products that have come down in price during recent years.

Central air conditioning never costs less than it does when you build. And the added investment will make your house worth more when you sell. Meanwhile, everyone sleeps better, eats better, feels better—even in the hottest weather. There are fewer allergy reactions. Rooms stay cleaner. Indoor living is happier and entertaining so much easier.

Small wonder that so many homes enjoy Carrier air conditioning today—more than any other make!

Your nearby Carrier dealer can give you the exact cost of air conditioning your home. He's listed in the Yellow Pages of the telephone book. Carrier Air Conditioning Company, Syracuse, New York.

THE AMERICAN HOME American Home Bldg., Forest Hills 75, New York

NO SOAP in the house can be a thing of the past if you store it in an Early American soap bar caddy. It will hold as many as 8 hand cakes, and just a glance will warn you when you're running low. 12x51/4x3" deep, it will stand on its own or can be hung on a kitchen or bathroom wall. Made of pine, it is $2.98, 2 for $5.50. Crescent House, Box 621-AH, Plainview, N.Y.

RING DOWN THE CURTAIN on a cast of old curtains and give your home a country air with this pair of floral, ruffled tiebacks. The print with an Early American flavor comes in red or blue with green, or yellow or rust with brown, on an off-white ground. They drip dry. 45", 54", 63", and 72", $6; 81" and 90", $7.50. Country Curtains, Dept. AHF2, Stockbridge, Mass.

GIVE THREE SHEARS to this "scissory" for safekeeping. Made of a bright and cheery calico print with a wooden ring at the top, it holds 3 pair of scissors. Hang it in kitchen, den, sewing room, or behind a door, where the cutters will be handy for you but out of the reach of little hands. Specify red, blue, or yellow. $2.50. Seth & Jed, Dept. A8, New Marlborough, Mass.

ALBUM OF READERS'HOMES

We would like to share with you some of the snapshots that come to us in the mail. We'd like to hear from you, too. Please include pictures.

We designed this Cape Cod home ourselves. It combines the Eastern look with the California idea of having the living room at the rear, overlooking the backyard. This pleasant view includes our three mature Valencia orange trees. To preserve the charm and crispness of the authentic colonial-type windows, we've had special screens installed that roll up with the windows. When the windows are closed, the screens are rolled down, out of sight completely.

Mr. James E. Carlson, Santa Ana, California

66 We moved into our house ten years ago, wanting to try country living for a while, and now we wouldn't trade it for the world. The house is white with pink trim and in summer we add awnings. Everyone calls it a 'doll house' because of its size and the way it sets against the mountains. The Susquehanna River, which flows in front of the house, is ideal for fishing and boating.

Mr. and Mrs. Ted Hyzenski, Susquehanna, Pennsylvania

66 My husband is the fourth generation to own Kendrick House, which was built in 1854. Occupied by soldiers of both armies during the Civil War, it's the oldest home in Jasper County, and the only one that survived the burning of Carthage in 1863.

Mrs. Andrew J. Janney, Carthage, Missouri

Our house is built from a plan substantially the same as an American Home Blueprint. We'd held onto the plan for eight years, finally building it exactly to suit ourselves. The exterior of our home is faced with old brick that had been salvaged from a house in Fredericksburg, Virginia, which dated from 1742.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. White, Culpeper, Virginia

6 Our home is a Cape Cod style, fashioned after an old house in Connecticut. We've lived here for 20 years, currently with the company of our three small dogs. Right now is bulb-planting time—in spring they bloom by hundreds all around the house.

Mrs. Leo F. Miller, Port Washington, New York
