What You Should Know About the 'New' Heat Pumps

Now, the crafted look of wood floors without using wood.

Introducing the Woodstock™ Collection from Armstrong.

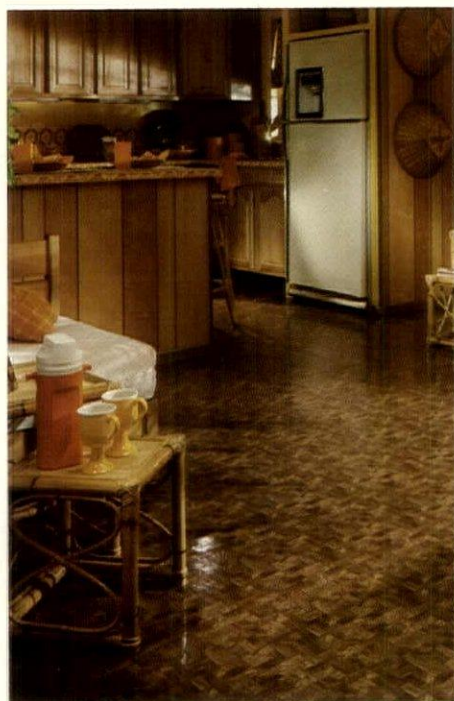

Woodstock is realistically grained like wood. It's even cut like wood in 12"x12" parquet squares, 6"x18" planks, and 36"-long random-width planks. In all, there are 11 Woodstock patterns, in light and dark natural-wood colors.

Because it's vinyl, Woodstock keeps its handcrafted good looks with very little care. And the durability of vinyl means Woodstock is as practical in kitchens and entries as it is beautiful in dining and family rooms.

Give your customers back-to-nature charm and the look of real wood at an affordable price with Woodstock floors that are "So nice to come home to."

For more information about the Woodstock Collection, contact your Armstrong floor contractor today. Or, write Armstrong, Dept. 18FHH, P.O. Box 3001, Lancaster, PA 17604.

Behind the Scenes at the Buyers' Guide—and an Editor Turns Entrepreneur

We've been working on this issue of HOUSING for the past six months—and we think it's worth every minute of that time. For it contains our annual Buyers' Guide, which gives you a quick way to find out who makes specific types of building products.

Why should it take six months to produce a Buyers' Guide that doesn't look very different from last year's? Mainly because we do everything possible to make sure that our listings are accurate and up to date. Thus we get in touch with each company that was listed the previous year to make sure that names, addresses and telephone numbers are correct and to find out if there are any additions to or deletions from their product lines. We also compile a list of companies that weren't in previous Buyers' Guides and send them questionnaires to see if they might qualify. Some 2,336 companies made the grade this year, so you can imagine what a job it was to gather and process all the data.

We couldn't have done it without help from several computer systems and a young man named Kevin Harold. That's him below, picking a finished page off the typesetter.

We hope the results will be helpful to you. And we'd like any suggestions you may have that would make our Buyers' Guide even more useful.

On another subject, HOUSING's seminars are now being produced by a company named InfoSource, Inc., and the story behind that change is a happy one. For the president of InfoSource is none other than Elise Platt, who has been on our staff for nearly ten years—the last six as the person responsible for our seminar program. She has now opened her own business so that she can expand into other areas. But for us—and for those of you who keep coming back to our seminars time and time again—nothing will change. The same group will be doing the planning and taking care of the multitude of details involved in producing the seminars.

Platt (right) and Grace Halsey, her director of programming and operations, are shown at right on their moving day. We were both sad and glad to see them go.

Most new homes have glass foundations.

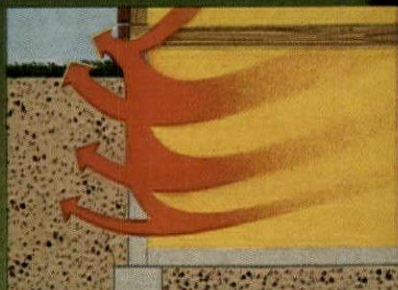

A typical 8-inch concrete block foundation has an R-value of 1.11, very similar to the 0.91 R-value of single-pane glass. It allows the surrounding earth mass to act like a giant heat sink, drawing heat from a basement at a tremendous rate: Up to 22% of a home's total heat loss! But durable, easy-to-install STYROFOAM* brand insulation can cut both foundation and frame wall heat loss dramatically.†

Today's energy-aware new home prospects are looking beyond initial costs, to find homes they can afford to own. They're asking for energy-efficiency from top to bottom. And they're willing to pay over $1300 extra for a total energy package.

STYROFOAM brand insulation delivers the unique combination of lasting high R-value, compressive strength and moisture resistance that stands up to tough below-grade installations. These same characteristics make it your logical choice for walls, too. And STYROFOAM can be used in a specified one-hour fire-rated frame wall system when required.††

So wrap your new houses in an insulating overcoat of STYROFOAM brand insulation from roofline to footer. Your new home prospects will appreciate being shown homes they can afford to own.

Heat escapes horizontally through wall into earth, and vertically through wall into air.

†Savings vary. Find out why in the seller's fact sheet on R-values. Higher R-values mean greater insulating power.

Survey conducted September, 1979, by The Opinion Research Corp., commissioned by The Dow Chemical Company.

††Meets requirements of ASTM E 119-79 endurance test criteria for 60 minutes. Further information available from your supplier or from Dow.

Remember, STYROFOAM brand insulation—America's #1 seller—is made only by The Dow Chemical Company, and is supported by a comprehensive nationwide advertising and public relations campaign that makes your selling job easier. For complete information, call your Dow sales representative or write: The Dow Chemical Company, Dept. H60, STYROFOAM Brand Insulation, Midland, MI 48640.

CRESTCLAD® The wood window with “The Aluminum Overcoat.”

Crestclad® windows are the good solid wood windows that Crestline is known for, but with the addition of aluminum cladding. Our Crestclad® line includes casements, double-hungs, sliders, and even patio doors. With bright white or rich Pewertone® cladding outside, nutmeg-stained wood inside. You'll like them. Our 89 years of experience gives us that kind of confidence.

Now, here are some answers about Crestclads before you even ask the questions. Yes, these windows save energy. Yes, you can have as many as three layers of glass. No, the cladding won't crack, chip, blister, or rust. No, it doesn't have to be painted. And yes, you'll have windows quick! If the models you want aren't in stock at your dealer, we'll rush them right to him.

Over the last few years, we've challenged ourselves to provide dealers with "Windows in a Week." And we're kind of proud of our 97% success rate!

To find out more about the Crestclad® line of energy-saving windows, just jot a note to Dave Brede at Crestline, Wausau, Wisconsin 54401.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board authorizes widespread use of another new mortgage.

Now federal S&Ls can offer home borrowers the Graduated Payment Adjustable Mortgage Loan (GPAML), as it is called by the FHLBB. This loan combines features of graduated-payment mortgages and adjustable-rate mortgages, plus it allows limited negative amortization. Key features: reduced monthly payments in the early years; and two options on adjustments that reflect interest rate changes. The lender may either change the amount of the monthly payment, or else increase the balance of the loan, but with this constraint: Monthly payments may be too small to amortize the loan only for the first ten years. Also, the term on the GPAML may not exceed 40 years.

A pioneer of American home design, architect Marcel Breuer, has died. The 79-year-old Breuer was internationally acclaimed for his influence on contemporary architecture, and he set standards in both interior planning and exterior design. "Throughout today's homes, we find examples of his influence, including bi-nuclear floor plans, innovative use of cantilevers, and high-technology elements used in conjunction with more traditional materials," says Martin M. Mintz, AIA, director of technical services for the National Association of Home Builders. "He will be missed."

"Land is fast becoming an overrated investment" as the rate of inflation subsides. "So is real estate in general." That assessment comes from the Washington, D.C.-based Homer Hoyt Institute, a non-profit organization which collects and distributes data on land costs. Even so, its report continues, land prices nationwide went up last year, on average, while lot sizes declined. The average cost of a finished lot was up $1,250, to $13,539; the average size was down 21 sq. ft., to 12,807 sq. ft. However, the average cost fell in seven states: Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, North Carolina, Ohio, South Dakota and Tennessee. And the actual per-square-foot cost of land dropped in four states: Nebraska, North Carolina, South Carolina and West Virginia.

New standards to measure solar equipment effectiveness have been proposed by HUD, and the agency is soliciting comments on the usefulness of such measurement. For nearly seven years, HUD and the National Bureau of Standards have been developing performance measurement standards for solar equipment in buildings. Now Congress has ordered HUD to come up with "definite performance criteria" for measuring solar systems. Results could eventually lead to standards for measuring energy efficiency of homes and other buildings that use solar technology. More information about the proposal is available in the Federal Register of June 24, page 32738.

Legislative proposals that would essentially permit S&Ls to operate like banks were made by Richard T. Pratt, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Pratt's proposals were offered as cures for the high-loss fever currently afflicting many thrifts. "If Congress does not act in the short run to address this matter, there will be no long run for a very substantial segment of the thrift industry," Pratt warned. Proposals included letting thrifts give businesses checking accounts and loans, engage in equipment leasing and invest directly in real estate acquisition and development. But House Banking Chairman Fernand J. St Germain (D-R.I.) turned a cold shoulder. Said he, "Rather than addressing the short-run problem, the bill would bring about a long-term restructuring of the thrifts overnight, destroying the last vestige of a specialized mortgage-finance supplier."

Will the Canadian lumbermen's strike push up prices? Sources in British Columbia, where 65,000 members of three unions walked off the job in mid-July, say a lengthy strike could raise prices by up to $50 per thousand board feet—25% higher than they are now. But a glut exists in the market for lumber now, and prices for many woods have been falling lately. Says John Muensch, chief economist of the National Forest Products Assn. in Washington, "Right now, with the interest rates where they are, I don't see a turnaround in the market."

HOUSING HOTLINE

Perhaps it's the ultimate in high density—an eight-family, three-bedroom house. Houston developer Steve Ley thought he'd merely rented one of his subdivision's homes to a nice married couple. Imagine his surprise when seven families with more than ten children in tow showed up one Saturday afternoon ready to move in, each claiming it had paid a deposit of $400 to $1,200. On Sunday another family showed up—the eighth victim of the con job. All had been defrauded by a six-foot-three, 300-pound con man and his wife, who, says Ley, carries a manslaughter conviction. The couple answered Ley's newspaper ad, rented the home and kept right on renting it to others—collecting $4,700 in deposits. They had worked similar schemes in Tennessee and other parts of Texas, says Ley. He eventually straightened out the mess and found housing for the duped tenants, but the flabby flim-flam man disappeared. "He's a real smooth talker," notes Ley. "You know, he could make a million dollars in this market if he'd only go straight."

The White House isn't buying an old policy on suburban shopping malls. Reagan administration deregulators have officially dropped the part of the Carter Administration's "Community Conservation Policy" [HOUSING, Aug '80] which could block federal highway and other grants when a new mall was shown to contribute to an area's urban sprawl. The program was dropped, says White House deregulator James Miller, to "avoid unnecessary federal intrusions in local government matters and in the private marketplace."

California adds to the controversy over due-on-sale clauses. Federal Home Loan Bank Board regulations do not override California rules which limit the enforcement of due-on-sale clauses in home mortgages, rules the California Court of Appeal. This latest ruling in the state-by-state battle over lender efforts to stop the assumption of mortgages bearing below-market rates [HOUSING, July] upholds the 1978 curb on due-on-sale clauses by the California Supreme Court for two reasons: First, because federal rules to the contrary do not come from Congress, but from the FHLBB, and second, because the FHLBB rules merely okay enforcement but do not demand that S&Ls enforce the clauses. The ruling came less than a week after the U.S. Court of Appeals in Richmond ruled that due-on-sale clauses can be enforced in Virginia. Meanwhile, FHLBB Chairman Richard Pratt has asked Congress to pass legislation to preempt the state bans.

Sales of mobile homes were 46% ahead of last year for May, reports the Manufactured Housing Institute. But the month's unit sales, at 22,884, lagged those of April of this year by 5%, MHI says. The year-to-date total through May, at 101,631, is 13% ahead of 1980. (For an in-depth look at the growth of mobiles, see story, page 26.)

Can the All-Savers Bill be saved? What the thrift industry considered a modest proposal has kicked up a storm of controversy. The thrifts succeeded in getting wide support for a provision in tax legislation creating a one-year, tax-exempt savings certificate with a yield pegged at 70% of the six-month Treasury bill rate. Because the yield would be tax-free, such a certificate could carry a lower rate and still appeal to wealthy investors with a marginal tax rate of about 35% or more. That would cut the thrifts' cost of raising money. But it would also cost the Treasury about $5 billion in lost tax revenues and would make it tough for some other borrowers to compete for funds. Since the rate on the certificate would be above the comparable rate on tax-exempt public bonds, the National League of Cities, the Municipal Finance Officers Assn. and the Public Securities Assn. all tried to block the legislation—on the grounds that it would make it harder for cities and states to raise money. Even banks joined the attack when some versions of the proposed legislation linked the certificate to home mortgage lending and therefore would have excluded many banks from offering the certificate. Credit unions complained, too. The Treasury took the position that the certificate represented poor tax policy, but Treasury Secretary Regan said President Reagan would not veto the tax bill if the certificates provision were in it.

New Wind Ridge Siding makes selling homes a breeze.

New Wind Ridge™ siding helps sell new homes for you, because it's got the built-in curb appeal to stop people in their tracks.

Wind Ridge is the new textured hardboard siding from Champion® with the look of deeply textured, weathered planking. Its unique groove and woodgrain design creates the appearance of varying plank thickness for a dramatic visual effect.

Wind Ridge panel siding is available with a special factory two-tone prefinish to heighten its deep woodgrain texture. Or primed and ready to paint or stain.

It also comes factory primed in fast installing 16' lap siding to save you time and money.

And of course, Wind Ridge has the same durability of all our hardboard textured sidings. It resists denting, and saws with a minimum of splitting and edge chipping.

For more information on Wind Ridge and all our other fine sidings, contact your local Champion dealer or your Champion Sales Office.

Carrier your energy ally.™

"We built 25 quality homes last year, and Carrier helped us sell every one!"

"My partner, Bob Cochran, and I use only the name brands that reflect the quality of our custom-built homes," says Charles Streusand, President of Kenswick Corporation. "In air conditioning, that means Carrier.

"And we've used Carrier ever since we started building in the Huntwick Forest suburb of Houston. Because our weather calls for cooling 80% of the year, we select the high-efficiency Carrier 'Round Ones,' so owners save maximum energy.

"Customers are so satisfied, they ask explicitly for Carrier again when we build second and third homes for them. Carrier equipment has always performed well, and we have probably fewer service calls than we would with any other make."

Whether you build 500 homes or just 5, let Carrier add the same kind of sales power to your next project that it has added to Kenswick Corporation. Housing Starts The Long-Term Picture

We foresee some early improvement in starts—albeit from abysmal levels—after late fall, when interest rates should have succumbed to a sluggish economy. Still, the real key to housing's recovery is under debate in Congress right now. A tax cut similar to that proposed by President Reagan, which includes significant incentives for savings and investment, will boost the supply of lendable funds. At the same time, cutbacks in federal spending will leave more of the credit pie to the private sector. Thus our outlook still foresees starts in the 1.7 million range by mid-1982.

Homebuilding activity in June was further pared by the inexorable drive of mortgage rates to all-time highs. This month's figures show residential construction perilously close to the painful depths reached in May of last year, when starts dropped to an annual rate of 938,000 and permits to 864,000.

The money cost juggernaut has sent home construction plummeting by 38% since January. And the latest surge in interest rates promises no quick return to healthy markets.

Activity in the South and West held up better than average in June, with starts off about 10%. But starts in the Northeast sagged by 17%, while the North Central region showed a 15% drop.

Single-family starts have skidded 34% since last September. And although multifamily starts of five units and more dropped only slightly this month, activity here is down 48% from January.

Sales of new single-family homes climbed nearly 16% in May, but this improvement was surely temporary, reflecting a brief reprieve from the interest-rate spiral. Moreover, sales of existing homes fell 3.8% in May, as did mobile home shipments, further contradicting the notion of healthy markets.

Average home prices advanced in May, up 0.6% for new-home sales and 1.7% for existing homes. Still, higher prices only promise to depress demand more right now, and generally reflect the sad fact that only upper-income buyers can participate in the present market.

All data seasonally adjusted unless marked by an asterisk (*). In most cases latest figures are preliminary, with revisions shown in next month's table.

Wholesale prices for construction supplies rose by 0.7% seasonally adjusted (0.3% before adjustment). That's slightly faster than the general rise in producer prices, a divergence that is a worrisome trend lately. One problem area, asphalt paving materials, showed price moderation in May and June, but the decline was less than should be expected this time of year. And look for asphalt prices to move up sharply once construction activity picks up.

The weakness in residential construction activity fed through to labor markets in June, as unemployment in the building trades rose to 16.6%, while the number of construction jobholders shrank by 1.4%. Similarly, production of construction-related materials fell by 1.4% in June, while new orders for such goods fell 1.8% in May.

Conventional mortgage rates surged to new heights in June, ominously topping the peak of April of last year. Sadly enough, the causes of the record rates—disastrous deposit flows and the prohibitive cost of funds—are likely to plague mortgage lenders for several more months. Most recently, the nation's money supply surged by $6.9 billion, meaning the Federal Reserve has little option but to keep the clamps down.

In one sense, May data show a dramatic strengthening in insured S&L deposit flows. Nonetheless, improvement came at heavy cost to S&Ls offering certificates at back-breaking yields.

Our outlook is for money market rates to gyrate at elevated levels through August at least. Reasons: The Treasury will be borrowing at least $8 billion, there is a $20 billion overhang in the corporate bond market, and merger madness promises to pour more fuel on credit fires as successful suitors take down their huge bank lines.

The economy stumbled in the second quarter as real gross national product fell at a 1.9% annual rate. Not surprisingly, residential investment contributed to the overall decline, collapsing at a 20.2% clip. Crushing interest rates and paltry income growth foreshadow more shrinkage in the third quarter. At least the downturn has taken some of the sting out of inflation, which eased to a 6% pace last quarter. But price rises will speed up to around an 8-9% rate by late this year as food and energy costs quicken. Thus, a tax cut by this fall will be most timely, boosting disposable incomes and investment incentives. And we look for a growing economy for the fourth quarter.

SUNSATIONAL!

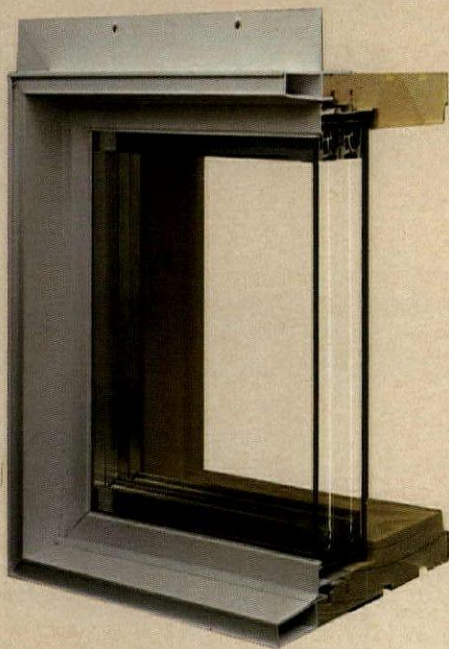

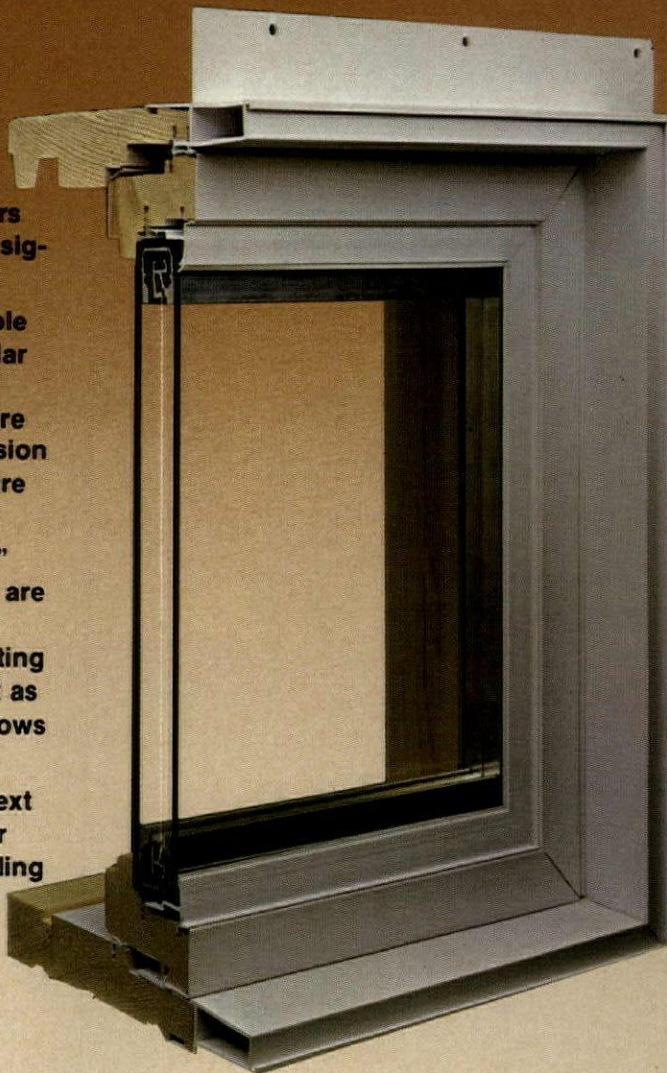

Capture the Sun with New SolaireFilm Wood Windows and Doors by WEATHER SHIELD

Now available from Weather Shield Mfg., Inc., an innovative glazing system that puts more of the sun's energy to work for you. Weather Shield SolaireFilm Energy-Efficient wood windows, patio and entrance doors give you a powerful new building component which can significantly reduce heating costs.

These windows and doors are built like conventional triple pane units except that the center lite is a transparent solar sheet developed especially for insulated glass glazings. The film is suspended on spring mounted spacers that are visible on the narrow ends of each unit. Both the suspension system and film have undergone rigorous testing to insure years of trouble-free operation.

SolaireFilm units from Weather Shield have the same "U" factor and insulate as effectively as triple pane glass, yet are more transparent to solar energy. The combination of "more heat in and less heat out" means you save on heating costs. Few other solar components work as simply, cost as little, or are as maintenance-free as Weather Shield windows and doors with this new transparent solar film.

Take advantage of this unique glazing system on your next building project. Weather Shield is offering passive solar film in selected sizes of its fine quality wood windows, sliding patio doors, direct set units and steel insulated entrance systems. All are available in a choice of primed wood exteriors or any one of Weather Shield's low maintenance exterior finishes.

Super energy-efficient quad glazing is offered in direct set units only. Quad pane units are 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ " thick, consisting of two lites of film suspended between the outer layers of glass. The units rate high on solar transmission while insulating better than triple pane units.

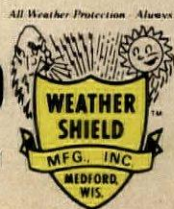

GET THE BENEFITS OF SOLAR ENERGY WITHOUT THE COMPLICATIONS. Get Weather Shield SolaireFilm Energy-Efficient wood windows, patio doors and entrance systems.

The Rate Deregulation Machine Is in Gear

On August 1, the gradual elimination of interest rate ceilings for deposits in the nation's financial institutions began—marking the arrival of the brave new world of rate deregulation. The thrifts and banks have been bracing themselves for this since Congress passed landmark financial legislation last year; the timing, however, turns out to be less than auspicious. Reason: Short-term interest rates are higher than longer-term rates, making the transition rough on many S&Ls and mutual savings banks.

Among the changes that are taking place:

- Interest rates on thrift deposits with maturities of two-and-one-half to four years can go as high as rates on Treasury securities of the same maturity. Commercial banks will pay one-quarter point less.

- Interest rates on all deposits with maturities of greater than four years have no ceiling at all.

Other ceilings, such as those on rates paid on savings account deposits and the popular new NOW accounts, remain the same for now.

Some financial institutions plan to offer floating interest rates on deposits of four years or longer, with the rate moving up and down with short-term Treasury bills. These new accounts would make the institutions more competitive in attracting deposits.

Mixed reviews. Many banking executives feel the higher rates will increase their cost of raising money and keep mortgage rates high as well.

"I have long said that we are not going to have 19-cent-a-gallon gasoline again. And we won't have 6% mortgages again, either," says Thomas R. Bomar, president of AmeriFirst Federal Savings and Loan Association in Miami. "Money for all borrowers is going to cost more—particularly for mortgage borrowers."

But Bomar sees an upbeat side to the first stage of rate deregulation: "It should have been done years ago. It will bring a better balance to the balance sheet and the liability ledger."

Topsy-turvy. To understand the advantage that Bomar sees—as well as the problem for many thrifts—it is necessary to look at how interest rates are structured now.

In normal times—which Congress had in mind when it ordered the elimination of interest-rate ceilings in last year's Monetary Control Act—interest rates on long-term deposits are higher than those on short-term deposits.

But these are not normal times. For most of the past year, short rates have been higher than long rates. This has given money-market funds a strong advantage over thrifts, because the funds are structured to take advantage of short-term investments.

To enable the thrifts to hold onto their deposits in the face of this competition, the deregulation committee could have lifted the ceiling on short-term deposits—especially the new NOW accounts—immediately. But that would have attracted all deposits into the highly volatile short-term accounts and opened them to the possibility of sharp inflows and outflows of money as interest rates jump around.

Instead, the committee chose to lift the ceilings on long-term deposits first.

Price paid. This choice cuts into the thrifts' ability to compete with money-market funds, however. So the new longer-term accounts indexed to the interest rates of short-term Treasury bills are only a partial solution.

Falling interest rates and the passage of time, of course, would help. By 1984, under the deregulation committee's schedule, only deposits of one year or less would have a ceiling, and even then the ceiling would be pegged to one-year or shorter Treasury bills. All ceilings would be eliminated by 1985, including the current 5.25% for NOW accounts. Only then will the thrifts be able to compete fully with the combined high yield and liquidity of today's money-market funds with checking privileges.

"We probably will go with some sort of indexed account," said Leonard Shane, chairman of Mercury Savings and Loan Assn. of Huntington Beach, Calif., as August 1 approached.

But Shane is not happy about the impact of the deregulation schedule on the thrifts. "The issue continues to be housing," he says. "I think, very candidly, that they've zinged housing again."

Fannie Mae Enters the ARMs Race

The Federal National Mortgage Assn. (Fannie Mae) has greatly expanded the secondary market for adjustable rate mortgages (ARMs), making their widespread use even more likely.

Fannie Mae follows in the footsteps of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. (Freddie Mac), which announced in June it would buy two forms of ARMs [HOUSING, July]. Fannie Mae says it will buy those two and six others (see chart, below). Fannie Mae will also buy other forms on a case-by-case basis.

The adjustable mortgages Fannie Mae has specified it will buy have interest-rate adjustment periods ranging from six months to five years and use various Treasury securities or the Federal Home Loan Bank Board as interest rate indexes. Their maximum payment adjustments range from 7½% to no limit at all.

Pierce Wants To Shun Image Of 'Silent Sam'

That's what Housing and Urban Development Secretary Samuel R. Pierce, Jr. found himself being dubbed in newspaper articles after six months in office: "Silent Sam."

His invisibility was accentuated by an embarrassing gaffe President Reagan made. At a recent reception for a large group of mayors—many of whom are black—the President greeted Pierce as "Mr. Mayor," momentarily mistaking him for one of them.

Although Pierce has brought himself out into the limelight to get better known, he's not saying much that will get him better liked—at least by homebuilders. But because he is the highest-ranking government official in charge of housing policy, his words are worth listening to—if only as an indicator of administration thinking on new housing policies.

Media show. Pierce had been seeking interviews with broadcasters, newspapers and magazines around the country. In one interview, he claimed some behind-the-scenes credit for keeping budget director David Stockman from obliterating FHA single-family insurance programs.

But his dominant theme has been: for the foreseeable future, there's little good news for housing.

He says that emergency treatment for the homebuilding industry now is neither good nor necessary. Business will get better by itself, contends

HUD Secretary Samuel R. Pierce, Jr. (right) swears in Alexander Aldrich as chairman of the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation.

Pierce, when the Reagan economic program brings down inflation and interest rates.

Pierce says that the industry's recovery "might take two or three years," adding, "We don't have any particular program to stimulate the housing industry and do not intend to crank one up." Meanwhile, he says, "the housing industry won't go completely out of business."

Programs. Pierce proposes only one new program, and the outline is sketchy at best. HUD will try to help young married couples buy their first homes, and this would help the housing industry as well, he notes.

But this is not a certainty, and its coming into being depends on whether a "practical" program can be devised.

The Section 235 program for subsidizing mortgage payments for lower-income homebuyers "is a good program," says Pierce. He notes, however, that cuts in HUD's budget block its expansion.

On the administration's plans for subsidized housing for the poor, Pierce is noncommittal: "I am not sure we are going to continue Section 8 (rent subsidies)," he says. He sees the possibility of replacing Section 8 with a housing block grant program, providing the new program isn't too costly.

An important goal of Pierce's is to have increased the management efficiency of HUD by the time he leaves office. And his number one goal also has a familiar ring: to "turn the economy around and reduce interest rates."

HUD's 'Man for All Cities': E.S. Savas of New York

A key man to watch for changes in federal housing policy is E.S. Savas, the new assistant secretary for policy development and research at the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Savas comes from the same political milieu of New York City liberal Republicanism as his boss, HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce (see story, above). He says Pierce wants him to become "his staff arm and advisor on all major policy issues" to a greater degree than previous holders of his position. He will be especially influential on urban policy, and can back this up with previous experience as New York's deputy assistant mayor.

Possible changes. Savas is currently looking at proposals such as issuing vouchers or housing allowances for low-income families; shifting more of the present Section 8 spending away from new construction and into rent subsidies. He is also considering taking more responsibility for public housing and community development away from the federal government and giving it to the cities.

Commitments have yet to be made, however. For example, Savas has already completed a report, ordered by Congress, on the pluses and minuses of housing block grants. This is a proposal to return federal housing subsidy money to localities and allow them to use it with far more discretion than they now have. The report "comes down nowhere," Savas admits. It has "neither conclusions nor recommendations," but merely "defines the issues in an attempt to get an enlightened debate going."

Urban expert. Savas, as Pierce's leading urban advisor, is the HUD official in charge of enterprise zone legislation. He will also be responsible for the HUD urban policy report scheduled to be issued by the White House next February.

On cities, Savas says they have become "almost junkies mainlining federal funds," and that from now on "self-reliance has to be the main theme."

Non-residential development

BUILDING ASSETS FOR THE FUTURE

An intensive two-day course that will show you how to profit from small office buildings and shopping centers.

Today's higher interest rates and tight money are making it harder than ever for traditional residential builder/developers to survive. All over the country, builders are diversifying as a hedge against the cyclical nature of the housing industry...and to ensure themselves of a revenue base.

Small, non-residential projects offer new opportunities.

Developing small, non-residential properties is the most viable—and natural—expansion for residential builders. In scale, design, financing and construction these projects are not so different from the housing you are already building...your experience, skills and knowledge will be a big plus from the start.

And, these income-producing properties may well be your key

Real Estate assets in the near future.

Small, non-residential projects with high profit potential can provide you with tax shelters, revenue for capital investment as well as sound business alternatives.

But, the non-residential market is a demanding one.

It demands precise understanding of where the market is, its size and what it wants. It demands professional, flexible design and planning. It demands first-class marketing and management. And, it demands tight cost controls all the way from initial financing to the management budget.

This HOUSING seminar will show you how to meet those demands. Specifically, you'll learn:

Market research

- How to locate and identify prospective tenants
- How to identify market segments
- How to project absorption rates
- How to select the right site

Feasibility

- How to project construction costs, overhead and profit
- How to project cash flow
- How to project operating costs
- How to make the most of tax advantages
- How to handle depreciation

Design

- How to select an architect
- How to scale spaces to prospective tenants' needs
- How to handle tenant improvements
- When and how to provide extra amenities
- How to handle special construction details

Financing

- How to put together the best possible loan package
- How equity participation should be structured
- How to go the joint-venture route

Marketing

- How to select a leasing firm
- How to work with local brokers
- How to structure rents
- Short-term vs. long-term leases
- How to handle percentage clauses and escalation clauses
- How to advertise—and when

Management

- How to pick a good management company
- How much to pay for management—and what kind of service to expect
- How to use operating statements

And, you'll learn about special opportunities in recycled non-residential property

- The advantages of re-marketing existing properties
- Determining an existing building's potential value
- Deciding the right time to buy

You'll study with Michael F. Browning, assistant vice president of Real Estate Development Services at Coldwell Banker in Newport Beach, CA, Dr. Alfred J. Gobar, president of the southern California-based real estate research firm, Alfred Gobar Associates, Inc. and Steve Gravett, vice president of Holland Builders, Inc., a major development firm in Ft. Growing Government Interest Boosts Mobiles

A big breakthrough in mobile home sales is at hand, say optimistic industry spokesmen, thanks to favorable government actions and a housing market in need of an affordable product.

In the past few years, mobile home manufacturers have seen their sales ride up and down in tandem with those of site-built houses. Mobiles have commanded a 25% to 28% share of the new single-family market, says the Manufactured Housing Institute (MHI), a trade association. But the industry feels a sustained boom in mobiles is just around the corner.

In Texas, for example, the industry's goal is to produce half of all new single-family homes sold by 1985.

"And if you drop out Houston and Dallas-Ft. Worth, we already had 49.5% of the state market last year," crows Richard A. Kleymeyer of the Texas Manufactured Housing Association in Austin. When figures from Houston and Dallas-Ft. Worth are included, the mobiles' share drops to 28%, but this is up sharply from 21% in 1978. Texas is one of the biggest markets in the nation for mobiles.

Sunny outlook. The industry is equally optimistic in California, judging by Howard J. Snider, president of the Western Manufactured Housing Institute. He says, "If we ever get interest rates down, (mobile homes) will blossom into a much more significant segment of the housing market."

What's behind all this optimism, in part, is government intervention. The federal government and state legislature have adopted rules and requirements designed to break down the barriers to sales of mobile homes.

The biggest breakthrough occurred five years ago, although its effects are only now becoming significant. In 1976, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development adopted mobile home standards which were, in effect, a nationwide building code.

The standards are basically requirements for design, materials, and components that assure the buyer a minimum guaranteed level of safety. These regulations were issued under a 1974 law that forbids a state from having a mobile home standard different from the HUD standard—thus making a HUD-approved unit automatically saleable in any state.

Thus the HUD mobile home standards solved a major sales problem for manufacturers, by removing barriers that sometimes prevented interstate sales of mobiles. But another problem—the image of the mobile homes and their association with trailer parks—has long haunted the industry. And despite publicity about plush resort-area double-wides sited under palm trees in California and Florida retirement communities, that image problem persists.

Lower prices. The smaller price-tag on many mobiles may be one reason. The average single-wide mobile sold for about $18,700 last year, according to the Manufactured Housing Institute. Average size was 1,050 sq. ft., and average per-square-foot cost—without land—was $17.80.

Not all mobiles are that affordable, of course. The WMHI's Snider notes that in Newport Beach, Calif., a used mobile home recently sold for $140,000, "although it would only cost about one-fourth of that to replace." A prime location for a mobile creates value just as for any other home, says Snider: "You're buying the neighborhood. That alone would appreciate, along with the home."

Legal aid. If better locations will improve the image of mobile homes, California may be the spearhead in a national trend to boost mobiles. Laws already on the books require localities to tax mobile homes as real property once the unit is on a permanent foundation [HOUSING, March] and increase from 12 ft. to 14 ft. the maximum width of home sections that may be transported on state highways [HOUSING, April].

Another new law, which became effective July 1, prohibits localities from discriminating against mobile homes in residential zoning, says Snider. Although local rules can still dictate siding, roofing materials and roof overhang, a manufactured unit meeting other local requirements cannot be excluded from a locality simply because it is a mobile. These laws "will put our houses on a parity, at least, with site-built housing in zoning and taxation," says Snider.

Expired license tag. The Texas legislature this year passed a law to remove the mobiles from the "motor vehicle" tax classification. When the bill becomes law, the tax applied to the unit will no longer be based on the sales price, but on the cost of materials to the manufacturer—as is currently the case with housing built on site.

Another new Texas law provides more security for lenders by allowing them to place a lien on the land under a mobile home—even if the unit was sold on an installment sales contract.

Financial boost. On the national level, new legislation is pending to raise the FHA insurance ceiling to $48,000 for a double-wide on its own site (up from $30,000). Meanwhile, HUD is in the process of raising that figure, without legislation, to $40,550, as an intermediate step. The pending legislation would also boost the maximum loan term on a single-wide to 20 years, from the current 15. It would keep the current maximum 25-year term on double-wide units.

"Credit for these favorable provisions in the Senate bill is due Sen. Richard Lugar (R.-Ind.)," says the MHI. Lugar, chairman of the Senate Housing Subcommittee, has an obvious political interest in manufactured housing, because his state is a leading producer.

Base test. Congressional interest has also been shown in the use of modular housing as an affordability solution—even though modulars have never faced the same image problem that mobiles have.

Rep. Jack Brinkley (D.-Ga.) is promoting a demonstration comparing the cost of modular versus site-built housing on a military base. Brinkley is chairman of a subcommittee of the House Armed Services Committee.

Brinkley explained that his committee "has been concerned with the escalating cost of new construction for military housing. . . . The cost savings that can be realized by taking advantage of the manufactured housing production system can no longer be ignored."

The demonstration project will enable the Defense Department—which spends upwards of $200 million per year for the construction of new housing for families—to compare the relative performance and cost of the two different housing types under similar family-use and weather conditions.

The project, which has been approved by the full committee, calls for erecting 200 manufactured units, of 1,100 sq. ft. each, alongside 254 comparable site-built units.

The committee's projections, which some critics call optimistic: The site-built units will cost about $83,000—compared with $44,000 for the modulars.

Switch to Paslode® Power. And save.

It's the Paslode Power Promotion.

Now, more than ever, is the time to switch to Paslode Power. For a limited time, participating Paslode Distributors and Dealers are offering super savings on the SK-312 Nailer. They also have a limited supply of custom caps and T-shirts available for those who convert to Paslode Power.

If you've already switched, you know that Paslode pneumatic nailers are powerful, versatile and durable. If you haven't, here are some reasons you should: The SK-312 packs the power to drive 3½" nails at the rate of 4,000 an hour. Capable of firing 20 different nails, 2"-3½" in length, it performs most on-site nailing operations. The simple design of all Paslode nailers means fewer moving parts, less to go wrong. It also means that repairs, if necessary, can be made quickly and easily.

So if you're ready to experience Paslode Power, see your local Paslode Distributor. Ask about his cap and T-shirt offer.

"Do I appreciate the self-closing screen on my Pella sliding glass door?"

I'll tell the world!"

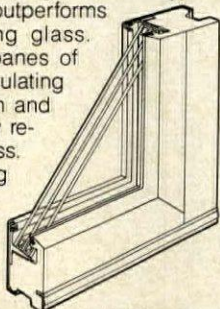

Even with traffic going in and out all day long, she doesn't have to wonder if the screen is closed. It is. Because every Pella sliding glass door features a screen door that closes and latches securely all by itself.

It's a constant reminder to her that the home you built reflects your consideration for the way she and her family want to live today... with convenience and quality. She's proud to show off her new home to her friends, and she's one of the best saleswomen you can have.

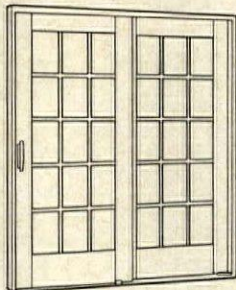

But having a self-closing screen isn't the only Pella feature that sells clients on your homes. There's more.

They're sold on Pella's energy efficiency. Pella's optional Triple Insulating Glass puts two $\frac{5}{16}$ " air spaces between three panels of glass for energy efficiency that significantly outperforms conventional $\frac{5}{8}$ " insulating glass. Standard glazing is two panes of glass separated by $\frac{1}{2}$ " of insulating air space. Where heat gain and glare are the issue, specify reflective environmental glass. And because the sliding panel is mounted on the outside of the unit, the harder the wind blows, the tighter the weatherstripping seals.

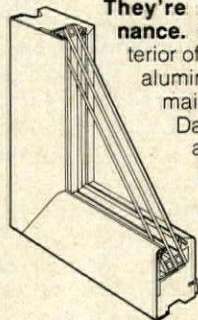

They're sold on having a choice of sliding door styles. Pella offers the Contemporary French Sliding Glass Door.

Identical in many ways to the Standard Pella Sliding Glass Door, the Contemporary French style offers some unique qualities of its own. It uses the exclusive Pella Double Glass Insulation System featuring a fixed outer pane and a removable inner panel of glass with a full $\frac{19}{16}$ " of insulating air space between panes. The interior panel can also be specified as Solarcool[®] Bronze glass to reduce heat gain and glare. And the space between panes will accommodate the attractive Slimshade[®] — narrow slat metal blinds that are fully adjustable. Or you can have an even more traditional look with authentically proportioned dividers made of solid wood, ready for stain or paint.

They're sold on fuss-free maintenance. Completely covering the exterior of the frame and sash is a sturdy aluminum cladding that's virtually maintenance-free. The White or Dark Brown finish is high temperature baked enamel that's extremely resistant to color degeneration, blistering, peeling, cracking or chipping. Yet even with all this protection on the outside, all you see on the inside is the warmth and beauty of real wood.

They're sold on your homes. Your business is built on satisfied customers — people who are proud to show off the home you built for them. And, while we agree that having all the high-quality Pella features is only one of the reasons that your homes are great, it's a significant part of making satisfied customers the best sales force you can have.

7½-Hr. House Breaks Construction Time Records

High-speed building is one foundation upon which Florida builder Otto DiVosta has built his firm's reputation [H&H, Apr. '76]. But he outdid even himself last May 1, when he directed the construction of a ready-for-occupancy house in record-breaking time. It took only 7½ hours.

Accepting the challenge. The brief event was a long time in the making. According to the DiVosta Co.'s in-house attorney, William Shannon, this wasn't the first time DiVosta had built for speed. Ten years ago, he put up a house in Tequesta, Fla. in four days, which was "something of a record" then. And, says Shannon, "he thought the pace was rather leisurely." So when he heard that U.S. Home had built its record-breaking 34-hr. house in Albuquerque last year, DiVosta decided to do them one better. Says Shannon: "He felt it was a record he could easily beat."

First stop: the Bankers Land Co. in Palm Beach Gardens. DiVosta asked them to donate the land, which they virtually did, selling him a 10,000-sq.-ft. lot (with a market value of $45,000) for $10,000.

The next stops were to over 100 local subcontractors and suppliers of building materials. DiVosta explained that they would not be paid for time or materials. So what was in it for them? Publicity—and a swimming pool.

The proceeds from the sale of the house were to go toward construction of a municipal pool. "We promised the subs and suppliers that we would put their names on a plaque at the pool," says Shannon. "That would be all they'd get, but it would be permanent. And nearly everyone agreed."

The next critical phase was the planning, which, according to Clifford Burg, president of the Shell Construction Co. and DiVosta's partner, took weeks. "We talked about every detail, down to the location of each stud and nail." DiVosta and his partners met with 100 "team leaders"—the head subcontractors—to readjust and fine-tune the construction schedule.

The most critical phase of the building process, they expected, would be the first four hours, when the shell

How the 7½-Hr. Timetable Ticked Away

It took weeks for DiVosta and his partners to work out a timetable so detailed that it would run itself. And when the gun went off at 7 a.m., coordination was so flawless that the workers managed to shave 25 minutes off the planned eight-hour schedule.

Here's the minute-by-minute rundown:

THE MORNING: From 7 a.m. to 9 a.m.

- 7:00-7:30 forms and plumbing are laid out
- 7:20-7:30 concrete finishers backfill; steel rods are set into foundation
- 7:30-7:40 wire mesh is laid on driveway
- 7:40-7:45 termite spray is applied
- 7:45 pouring of concrete slab foundation begins
- 7:55-8:05 driveway is poured
- 8:30-8:45 forms are stripped

At the same time—

- 7:00-8:15 roof sections are completed; interior and exterior walls being constructed; plumbing and electrical wiring are built into walls

From 9 a.m. to 12 noon

- 9:00-9:30 interior and exterior walls are set
- 9:30-10:00 roof is set; plywood sheathing applied
- 10:00-10:30 soffits and fascias are installed

- 10:00-10:45 air conditioning, electrical systems and plumbing are roughed in
- 10:30-11:00 outside painting begins
- 10:30-12:00 roofing is applied; brickwork is installed
- 10:45-11:00 insulation is installed
- 11:00-11:30 drywall is hung and taped
- 11:25-11:35 marble sills are installed
- 11:30-12:30 plaster is set

THE AFTERNOON: From 12:00 to 2:35 p.m.

- 12:00-1:00 patio is formed and placed
- 12:30-1:00 bath tile, millwork, kitchen, garage door and sprinkler systems are put in
- 1:00-1:30 interior is painted; patio fence put up; landscaping is begun
- 1:30-2:30 plumbing, trim, telephone and television wiring set; windows and garage door are installed
- 2:00-2:30 vinyl flooring and carpeting are laid down
- 2:35 final seal is received from the city

How can you get two-dryer income from a one-dryer space?

The GE Stackables.

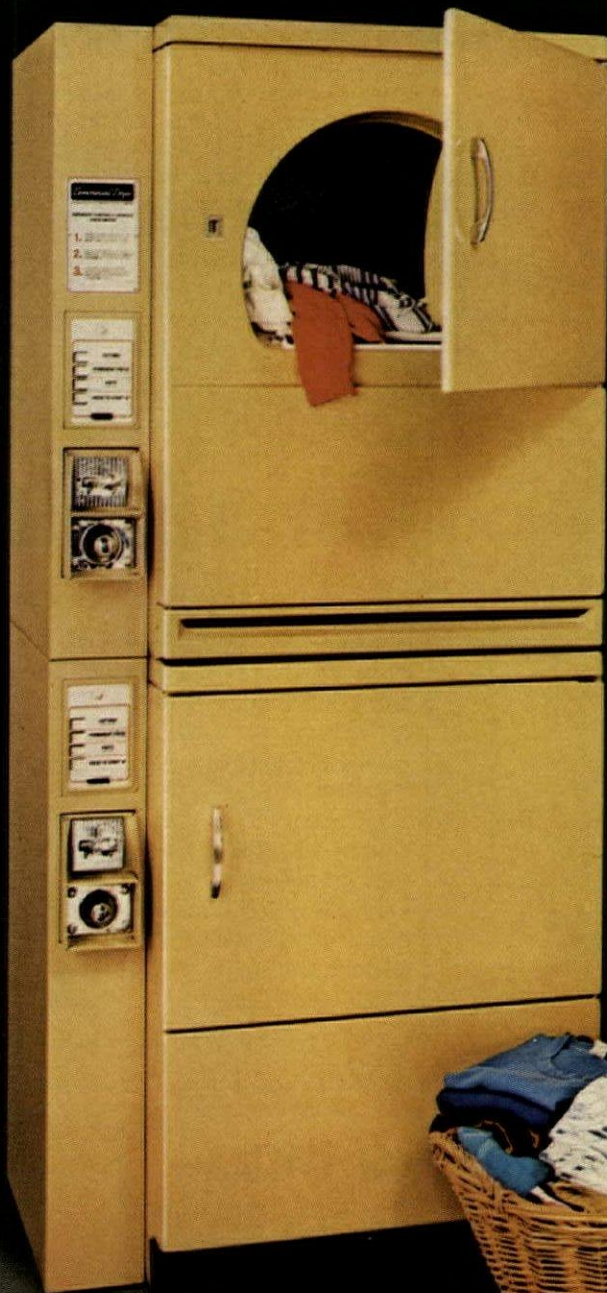

If you'd like the opportunity to turn better profits from your floor space—and save energy in the bargain—it's time you turned to General Electric Stackable dryers.

Two standard-capacity GE Stackables take up about the same floor space as one large-tumbler dryer.

That means you get twice the coin chutes in the place of one. Plus twice the profit potential.

Each GE Stackable gas dryer uses only 22,000 BTU's—about 50% less energy than regular 30-pound dryers, with normal-size loads. That can help trim your operating costs.

Plus the Stackables are easy to service even when they're stacked.

And your customers will find the Stackables doubly convenient because they can sort their wash, set each dryer for a different fabric and dry two loads at the same time.

To find out more about how turning to the General Electric Stackables gives you the opportunity to turn better profits while saving energy, see your GE Distributor or Route Operator now.

would be erected. "We felt that if we were on schedule at 11 a.m., we would have it made," says Burg.

To the test. The planning was put to the test at 6:55 a.m., May 1, on the empty site abutting a single-family subdivision in Palm Beach Gardens. A total of 730 workers—200 from the Shell Construction Co.—stood ready in assigned workplaces surrounding the site. Also standing by: a building inspector, who remained on site throughout the construction.

When work began at 7 a.m., the site resembled nothing so much as an anthill, as crews operated simultaneously. The only work done previous to the start was the construction of plumbing trees and the leveling of the site to grade. And the only prefabricated products were those which are normally prebuilt: roof trusses, cabinetry, and prehung doors. "But that was it. We didn't want any advantages," notes Burg.

The most difficult time, he says, was the first hour, when the concrete for the foundation was being mixed and poured. An accelerator, calcium chloride, had been added to the concrete, but no one was sure how long it would take to harden. "It was one of the unknowns, a critical phase. Had the slab not been ready for the other trades, it would have really slowed our schedule down."

But at nine o'clock, the foundation had completely hardened, having set in less than half the normal time. "It acted the way it was supposed to."

Minor problems. The first and only snag was setting the roof, which took 20 minutes longer than expected. But that time was made up later in the morning. Other than that, the schedule went like clockwork, with the crews completing their jobs almost to the minute planned (see box, page 30). "As many functions as could be done simultaneously were done simultaneously," says Shannon. "The workmen just did their jobs and got out of the way."

There were a few other minor problems. One, of course, was crowd control. Another was noise, which both Burg and Shannon described as "deafening."

And not the least of the problems was overenthusiasm. "Some of the crews wanted to start ahead of schedule—and that's as bad as falling behind," commented Burg.

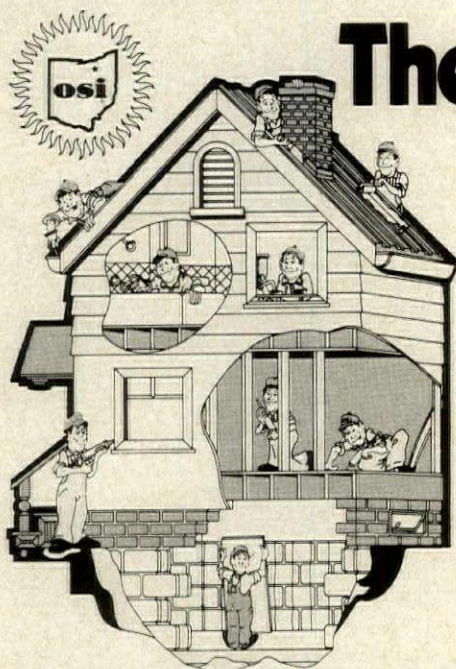

Countdown. As the 3 o'clock deadline approached, everybody pitched in to complete the landscaping. "It was almost like a cartoon—you'd see a palette of sod appear, and then a mass of people. Suddenly the people were gone, and so was the sod. It was all laid in 15 minutes. That was simply an incredible thing to watch."

And so at 2:35 p.m. the finished 1,712-sq.-ft. house was approved for occupancy by the city. It included three bedrooms, two baths, a two-car garage, and a patio. All carpeting and vinyl flooring were in place; the interior was painted, the exterior stained; all brickwork was laid; the cabinetry was installed—and it was fully landscaped.

"It wasn't just a box thrown together and sewn up," says Burg. The house was even certified by the local electrical utility for its "Watt-Wise" program, which encourages proper insulation and the use of high-efficiency appliances.

On May 10, the house was sold at a public auction as planned—and it again exceeded expectations. The estimated price was $100,000, but the selling price was $155,000. And with the proceeds, the Shell Construction Co. will begin construction of the pool at the community center next month. "But we'll take a little longer to do this one," laughed Burg. —J.A.W.

In the 60's the Perma-Shield® window was a revolutionary idea.
It still is.

In the 60's Andersen took a wood sash and completely enclosed it in vinyl.

The result was the Perma-Shield® casement window.

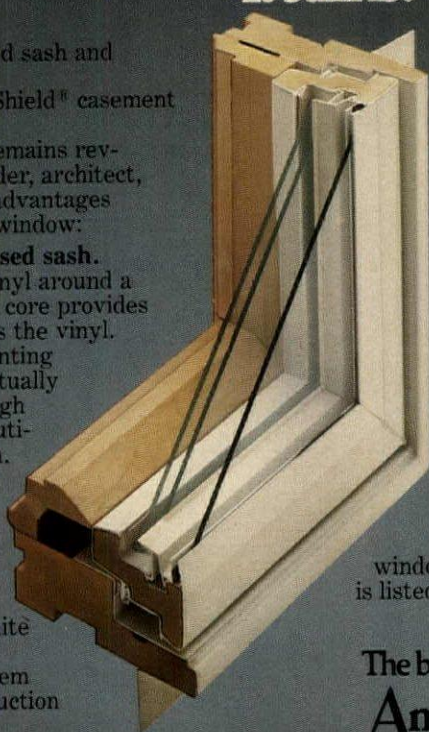

A revolutionary idea that remains revolutionary because it offers builder, architect, owner, developer and manager advantages they still can't get in any other window:

The only completely enclosed sash.

It's created by extruding vinyl around a pre-milled wood sash. The wood core provides superior insulation and stabilizes the vinyl. The vinyl sheath won't need painting every few years. In fact, it's virtually maintenance-free. It's thick, tough and long-lasting. Stands up beautifully to handling and installation. And it protects the wood core completely. Shields the wood against the blazing sun, bitter cold and driving rain of the outdoors, the heat, humidity and condensation of the indoors.

The vinyl is available in white or earthy Terratone color.

Optional triple glazing system also available for maximum reduction of heat loss.

One of a kind flashing.

Andersen extends the frame's vinyl covering to form a continuous flashing/anchoring fin that has no seams, gaps or corner joints. Makes for easier, more weathertight installation.

Sash corner joints like no other.

Andersen cornerwelds sash stiles and rails together under extremely high temperature. This unique leakproof seal protects the wood core and greatly strengthens the sash's dimensional stability.

The best frame joints...none.

Perma-Shield casement window frames are produced by bonding preformed rigid vinyl to the wood members. Preforming does away with corner joints. Eliminates four potential leakage points.

In the 60's Andersen distributors and dealers began offering a revolutionary new window. Their offer continues today.

Call them about using the Perma-Shield casement window in your next building. Your Andersen distributor is listed on the facing page.

Suits Against Block Grant Plans Allowed

Citizens unhappy with a city's Housing Assistance Plan have won a new right to block it. The bottom line of a recent court decision is that even longer delays are now possible in funding new public housing projects.

The ruling seems to conflict with clear signals that the U.S. Supreme Court justices do not want to open federal courts to additional private suits unless Congress specifically authorizes the actions. That conflict may mean that this housing case will ultimately end up in the high court. But for now, the decision is law for six southern states—Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas—controlled by the U.S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

The suit was brought against the Department of Housing and Urban Development by the Montgomery (Ala.) Improvement Assn. on behalf of poor blacks. They claim the city's application for HUD block grants would effectively perpetuate its pattern of racial segregation in residential areas. The plaintiffs also call the plan "substandard" in its help for the elderly, single women, and renters. The complaint charges that HUD should never have okayed the proposal.

Challenged suit. Those questions have yet to be tried, since the litigation, until now, has revolved around the question of whether such a suit can exist at all—whether Congress, in creating the federal Block Grant setup in the 1974 Housing and Community Development Act, had meant to open the way to such citizens' suits. Merely the right to sue gives local organizations a lot of bargaining power.

The appellate judges reasoned that the Montgomery suit was valid because the poor were among the groups Congress particularly wanted to help when it passed the 1974 housing law. The judges noted that other decisions had opened the way for suits by people alleging racial discrimination in other sorts of federal programs.

In other cases, courts ruled that:

- A landowner is liable for injuries to a trespasser only if the accident stems from "intentional, wanton, or willful" actions on the part of the defendant. The District of Columbia

Court of Appeals decided that a landowner's obligations to a trespasser should remain less than those to other people hurt on a defendant's premises—even though the court acknowledged that other jurisdictions have tended to wipe out old rules defining the landowner's duties for safety on the basis of whether or not the victim was invited onto the property.

- Statutes aimed at warning prospective buyers of real estate that title may not be clear are constitutional, even though the laws make it harder for the owners to sell. The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court turned back a challenge to the law from a landowner who claimed that he should be able to tell his side of the case before a notice of pending litigation is filed in the Registry of Deeds. The opinion stated that the filing of the notice wasn't depriving the owner of a major part of his property rights, and that, anyway, any honest seller should warn a buyer that a pending court suit might cloud title to the property he is purchasing. —DANIEL B. Our caulk withstands the test of time!

Franklin's Acrylic Latex Caulk stands alone in a sea of many. There are many caulks that are cheaper, many more expensive and many with fancy claims, but there are few . . . very few that can stand up to the toughest test of all like Franklin's Acrylic Latex Caulk. The one test that year after year separates the very good from the not so good . . . the test of time! How?

In 4 very important ways. 1. It SAVES your time, money and energy, too. It goes on neatly and dries quickly. It sticks tightly to all common construction materials without running, dripping or sagging and cleans up easily with water before drying. 2. Franklin's Acrylic Latex Caulk will keep your newly completed caulking job looking like new for years! That means no expensive call-backs or customer complaints. 3. The selection of 7 colors (including the new Tan) blend with the most popular siding, stain and paint colors. No need to paint over it. 4. Because of its superior adhesion, flexibility and resistance to weathering, Franklin's Acrylic Latex Caulk will produce a job that will speak well of your work with customers for a long, long time. So next time, use Franklin's Acrylic Latex Caulk, because in every respect it truly does withstand the test of time.

“After adding Cathedralite to my business, I built five more homes than last year!”

“Since investing in my Cathedralite dealer franchise, I built five custom homes I wouldn't have built otherwise.

“Let's face it, the costs of labor, materials and energy are skyrocketing. More and more of my customers are seeking alternative housing that makes sense.

“By adding Cathedralite homes to my business, I can now offer a custom home that saves up to 50 percent on heating and cooling costs, is far superior in structural strength, yet requires one-third fewer materials to cover the same square footage of a conventional home.

“And construction is simple. Cathedralite delivers the most precise, time-saving geodesic package on the market today. Everything is pre-cut and pre-assembled. With the help of my crew, I can erect an 1,800-square-foot geodesic shell in less than eight hours!

“Plus Cathedralite has a fantastic marketing program. Beautiful full-color brochures, extensive building seminars, films — the entire package makes my sales job a whole lot easier. And the on-going national advertising program refers any customer from within my region directly to me.

“In short, my Cathedralite franchise has expanded my business horizons farther than I ever thought possible!”

Cathedralite's Dealer Franchise Kit is available for $15.00. Call 800-538-0782 to order your kit. HOUSE CALLS

How Do You Handle

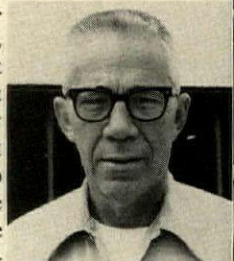

Victor Hanan, Loeb & Hanan Home Builders, Montgomery, Ala. Except in a large subdivision, it's not practical to have a guard on site because of cost. With large jobs, we usually have a guard after the workmen leave—about 16 hours a day and 24 hours on weekends. When our units are nearly completed, a security service car cruises periodically.

We've tried to prevent thefts by painting a special code on the back of carpeting and air conditioners. This was part of a program started by the Montgomery Home Builders Association. It helps discourage thefts, but when carpet, for example, is reinstalled, no one will notice the markings.

Another problem is neighbors who don't mean any harm but who take bricks or other items. Two or three we'll ignore, but when 300 are missing, we mention it to them.

Sometimes vandalism is worse than theft. If we know the culprit, parents usually pay us for damage. □

William C. Turman, president, Turman Construction Co., Barboursville, W. Va. The real deterrent is to get out and pursue a theft, not just report it to the insurance company and collect a little bit of money. That only fosters crime. We've hired two lawyers to help, and we'd like to see them prosecute the thieves to the limit, and also prosecute the criminals who receive stolen property from job sites.

The biggest possible deterrent to thieves would be to keep people from buying from them. Without a market, they wouldn't have a reason to steal. If we could get 100% cooperation from the people who buy these items, we could reduce crime to zero. □

P. Colin Dandridge, vice-president-production, Sanford Homes Inc., Englewood, Colo. The cornerstone of Sanford's security is the "Compound," a fenced area surrounding locked buildings in which we keep supplies, such as hardware, nails and appliances. All items are signed into the compound upon delivery. As certain materials are needed, a superintendent asks a worker to pick up the required items, which are then signed out to the person and to the job. Materials are expected to be used the same day, so they are never left around. The fence around the compound is kept locked, and the buildings within are wired to an alarm system.

A guard is posted after hours to protect the entire site from vandalism and theft of larger items, such as lumber. On all jobs we have signs announcing a reward for information leading to arrest and prosecution of anyone caught stealing or vandalizing company property. We are very willing to pay and to prosecute.

Sanford spends about $25,000 a year for this security program, which protects five major homebuilding projects in the south metropolitan Denver area. However, we may be over budget this year because of stepped-up security. □

Job-Site Security?

Martin Evers, Lakeview Lumber Co., Algoma, Wis. We firmly believe in discouraging thefts at building sites by delivering materials to locations frequently and in small quantities so that they're used up fast and don't remain stockpiled as a temptation to thieves. This applies especially to 2 × 4s and plywood. We schedule our deliveries of these materials to coincide with deliveries to other customers to save time and costs. Our low incidence of thefts, we believe, has resulted from this practice.

We operate in a two-county area and get wonderful cooperation from local police, who patrol the sites on which new homes are being built. This also applies to our main office, where the only theft we experienced was one break-in, when several calculators and a small amount of change was taken. The thieves were evidently scared away by a squad car, but not apprehended. □

Patrick Kenoyer, Creative Labor, Georgetown, Calif. Job-site security varies according to the type of job, the location, and its accessibility. We've been known to employ any and all means necessary to secure our materials and equipment. We've used guard dogs, safety patrols, and we secure all jobs with a fence.

Theft is more prevalent in larger towns and cities than it is here in the mountains. Country folk respect their own possessions and guard others' things as though they were their own. Here I can walk away from a site without fear of theft. I have on occasion walked off a site for a week or more and come back to find everything the way I had left it. □

Fred Absher, Absher Construction Co., Tijeras, N.M. First, we consider it management's responsibility to get enough material on hand so that the job runs smoothly, but no excess that could be spoiled or stolen.

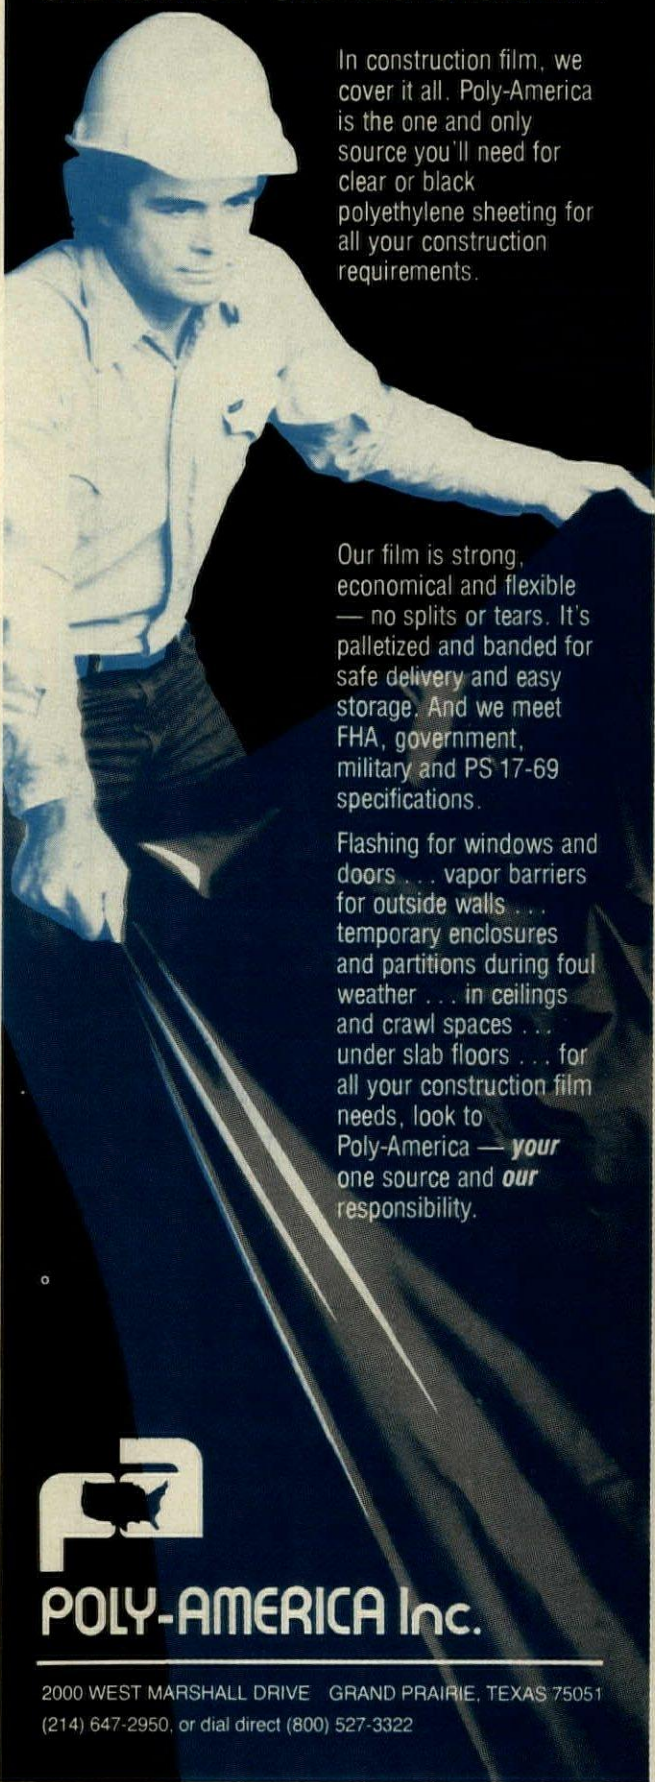

Color-coding material is a good way to control the random issuing of material. Spray-paint a patch—red for building A, blue for Building B, etc. When you see the wrong color going to a building, that's an immediate warning flag: Either the foreman is behind in ordering and he's borrowing, which means someone's letting you down, or material is being lifted from the lot. It's not expensive to do some investigating when you catch the problem early, before it gets out of hand.

One of the best investments you can make is to hire an honest employee to keep track of materials and equipment. A person will develop a feel for how much lumber has been used, or when air conditioners came in and where they went. Most pilfering starts when an employee has free access to the yard. He may be honest, but he takes too much material. That's waste. Or if nothing is being monitored, he may pick up a faucet, a hand drill, some tool worth a hundred dollars. Unsecured material leads to trouble. □

CONSTRUCTION COST GUIDE

What it should cost to build the same ranch house in 100 markets

Not surprisingly, estimated costs of the house (see plan) are up in 98 markets and down in only two. Increases since the last estimate, reported in March, average seventy-nine cents a sq. ft. and range from a ten-cent rise in Kansas City to a $3.43 jump in Fresno.

Fresno, at a total of $44.89 a sq. ft., is now the most expensive place to build this house, according to the experts who developed HOUSING's Cost Guide—the Cost Information Systems Division of the McGraw-Hill Information Systems Co. The least expensive place: Columbia, S. C., at an estimated $26.72 a sq. ft.

Only Cincinnati and Detroit counter the cost trend. But their decreases are slight—two cents in Cincinnati, eighteen cents in Detroit, where lower materials prices reflect an ailing economy.

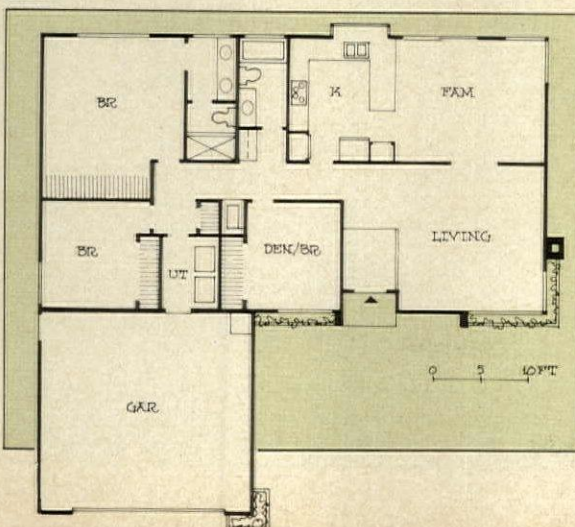

Elsewhere, materials account for the bulk of cost boosts. In fact, labor estimates are up in only 33 markets. Reason: Labor costs are based on union scale, and most union contracts have not been renegotiated since the last estimate for this house.

The house has a 1,502-sq.-ft. living area, plus a 467-sq.-ft. garage. Its construction is wood frame on slab, its quality above average. In the tables on the next seven pages, the Cost Guide breaks the house down into 13 elements (see below), then lists the labor cost, materials cost and cost per square foot of house and garage for each.

All figures are based on one-time construction of the house. So there's no allowance for economies of scale that come naturally with repeated building of the same model. Also, the Guide has been adjusted as follows for regional differences in materials and equipment:

The country was divided into five climate zones ranging from coldest (Zone A) to warmest (Zone E), with each market labeled accordingly (e.g., cold Milwaukee in Zone A, hot San Antonio in zone E). Specs for HVAC, roof insulation and foundations were then altered to suit temperatures in each zone. Roof insulation is 9 in. in Zone A, 6 in. in B, C and D, 3½ in. in E. Foundation footings are 4 ft. deep in Zone A, 3 ft. in B, C and D. In all Zone E markets except Los Angeles foundation costs are based on the use of monolithic slabs with no footings.

The 100 markets were selected primarily for their size: 85 are among the most populous SMSAs (Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas). But geographical distribution was also a factor. All 100 are covered in HOUSING's quarterly Housing Demand Index.

Foundation—excavation and footings
Floor on grade—fill, concrete, steel-trowel finish
Roof system—framing, sheathing, insulation
Roofing—cedar shingles, flashing, gutters, downspouts
Exterior walls—framing, sheathing, wood siding, insulation, paint, wood doors, aluminum windows, insulating glass
Partitions—studs, drywall, doors
Wall finishes—paint, ceramic tile
Floor finishes—ceramic tile, vinyl asbestos tile, carpeting
Ceiling finishes—drywall, paint
Fixed equipment—range, range hood, oven, exhaust fan, trash compactor, refrigerator, counters, cabinets, vanities, medicine cabinets, bathroom fittings
HVAC—forced hot air heating plus air conditioning
Plumbing—water heater, bathroom fixtures, kitchen sink, laundry tub
Electrical—light fixtures, switches and outlets, connections for major appliances, service panel.

This House Says 'Custom'— But It's Not

Fireplaces with Italian marble hearths and bathrooms with sunken tubs are features usually associated with one-of-a-kind homes. And that's precisely why former custom builder Fabian Krajmalnik is including them in his first tract houses: They appeal to quality-conscious buyers who can't swing the ever-escalating costs of a tailor-made home.

There are enough such buyers in San Antonio that Krajmalnik expects to triple his volume this year. In 1980, his company, F.K. Properties Inc., built 30 custom homes. In 1981, he expects 90 sales, mostly $100,000-to-$150,000 homes like the one shown here or $95,000-to-$120,000 zero-lot-liners like the one shown on page 52.

Increased sales aren't the only reason Krajmalnik is smiling. He sees many advantages in switching from mini-builder to merchant builder. "Our customers know what they're buying because they see models," he says. "Before we had problems with custom buyers who didn't understand blueprints."

What's more, he's convinced that the company is delivering a better-quality—though smaller—product. One reason: "The crews have a chance to get used to the plans," he says. "They can perfect their work."

Those plans do allow for some flexibility, however, so that buyers get a flavor of custom-tailoring. For example, the open dining room shown at right can be walled off and the basic zero-lot-line plan is offered with or without a loft. —BARBARA BEHRENS GERS

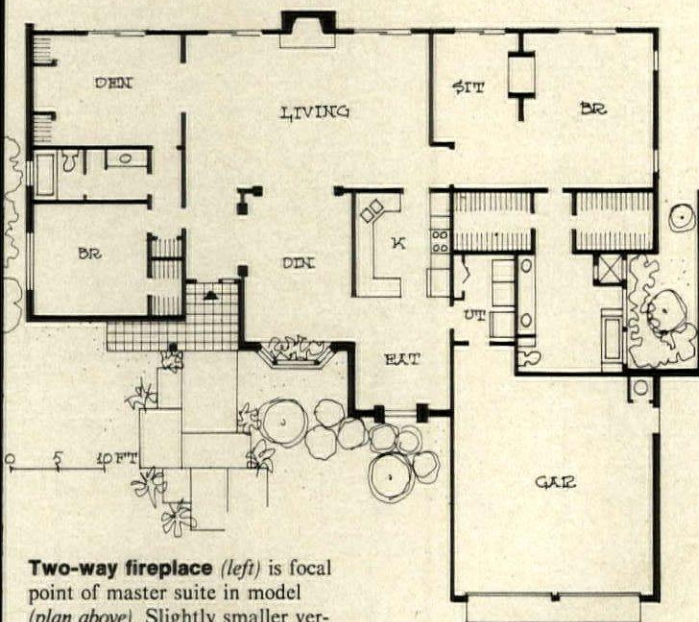

Elegant living room (above) appeals to mature buyers. Decorative fireplace mantel and Italian marble hearth, standard in this plan (below), do much to convince buyers of home's custom-like quality. Note the wood dining room flooring: It's standard, too. Pillars framing the dining area were added by merchandisers The Childs/Dreyfus Group.

Opulent master bath (above) features a sunken tub and views of a private garden. Such luxury is typical of Krajmalnik's tract homes: Even the less-spacious master suite shown in plan below includes a roomy bath with mini-atrium and windowed tub enclosure. The zero-lot-line home shown on the next page has a cedar-paneled bath.

Two-way fireplace (left) is focal point of master suite in model (plan above). Slightly smaller version of this 2,275-sq.-ft plan is also offered: Kitchen and bath layouts are somewhat different.

Alternate plan (above) has 2,230 sq. ft. Conventionally sited homes have accounted for half of company's 26 tract-house sales in the five months since project opened.

 ARCHITECT: Plans this page by F.K. Properties Inc.; plan page 52 by The Berkus Group, Santa Barbara, Calif.
 INTERIOR DESIGNER: The Childs/Dreyfus Group, Chicago, Ill.

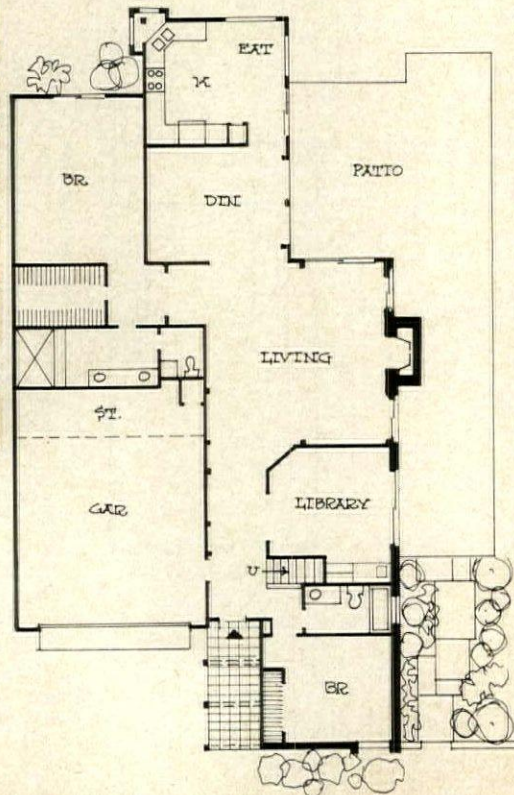

Zero-lot-line model (above) features the same concrete-tile roofing and brick exterior as the conventionally sited detached homes (previous page). Elevations vary, but all have a contemporary look. When built out, development will include a 52-unit zero-lot-line project, 72 standardized single-family homes and a few $170,000-to-$200,000 custom homes on prime lots with views of a wooded ravine.

Eat-in kitchen (above) has tile floor, which is standard in kitchen and dining area. Double-bowl sink is also standard; Ceramic-tile countertop is an option. Custom-made cabinets go to ceiling, so storage space is maximized. A somewhat smaller zero-lot-liner is also offered: In that plan the kitchen features a greenhouse window.

'Casual contemporary' is how merchandiser Gene Dreyfus describes the style of the living area above. It's a look that appeals to young two-income couples. Note the enticing view of outdoor areas through sliding glass doors, which are heavy-duty. "They're almost commercial grade," says Krajalnik. "They give a feeling of good value."

Two-bedroom plan (left) has 2,175 sq. ft. Den is also offered with closets, for use as a third bedroom.

Introducing the Advantage™ Fireplace, Heatilator's new concept in woodburning beauty and efficiency.

Energy-engineered from hearth to chimney, the Advantage lives up to its name for homeowner and builder alike.

Looks that sell.

New flush-hearth styling and low-profile design simplify your installation.

More importantly, they lend the trim, elegant look that makes the room and sells the home.

Heat that saves.

Its convective heat-circulating design and double heat-flow system make the Advantage the most efficient fireplace we've ever built.

Drawing from each side of the unit, the Advantage channels room air up around the hot firebox, over the double heat-exchangers, and back into the room via the large front screen.

The result is supplemental heat that saves energy and money.

Price — another advantage.

Competitively priced, the Advantage is an affordable mark of quality your homes deserve. So why settle for just any fireplace?

CREATIVE FINANCING

Nailing Down The Cost Of The Construction Loan

There's been lots of talk lately about "creative financing." But all of it has centered on one thing: the end mortgage. Obviously, before there can be an end mortgage, there must first be a construction loan. And that's what often causes builders the most trouble. For in times of rising interest rates, a construction loan pegged two or three or more points above prime becomes a time bomb that can sabotage even the most carefully thought-out project.

Some creative financing schemes geared toward construction loans are beginning to emerge. Of course, no financing package, no matter how creative, can keep short-term interest rates from yo-yoing. That's up to the Fed. But some plans can help a builder lock in a given interest rate and, in so doing, make short-term interest costs predictable—a worthy feat considering today's unpredictable interest rates. Below are two such plans.

—WALTER L. UPDEGRAVE

1. Hedging the loan with T-bill futures

This means thinking of money as a commodity. And just as someone who trades in lumber, cotton, corn or any other commodity can lock in a price by taking a position in the futures market, a builder can use futures contracts for 90-day Treasury bills to create "almost-fixed-rate" construction loans.

It's a technique that Stan Ross, a partner in the public accounting firm Kenneth Leventhal & Co., Los Angeles, has used to protect clients against profit-eroding fluctuations in interest rates. Here's how it works:

As interest rates rise and fall, the price of a fixed-income security such as 90-day Treasury bills also rises and falls. Since the price a builder pays for his construction loan also varies with interest rate movements, a hedge can be set up matching Treasury bill gains to construction loan losses, the losses being the extra dollars paid as prime rises. Conversely, should the prime rate fall, a "gain" on the construction loan would be offset by a loss on Treasury bills.

To lock in a given interest rate, the builder takes a "short" position in the Treasury bill futures market. This means he makes a contract to deliver at a certain date in the future a specific principal amount of 90-day Treasury bills at a fixed price. The amount of Treasury bills the builder contracts to deliver will depend upon the amount of the loan. Treasury bills come in million-dollar denominations, and Ross says he can make the scheme work for loans as low as $5 million.

The builder does not own Treasury bills when he makes this contract. Rather, he buys them at the market price when it comes time to "cover" his short position. He may also cover his position by selling his contract.

The builder makes or loses money when he covers his short position. This is because the price of Treasury bills moves in the opposite direction of interest rates. When rates go up, the price of Treasury bills falls. This occurs so the interest rate paid by the Treasury bill is consistent with market yields. If interest rates fall, the price of the Treasury bill rises to reflect the falling market yields.

Assume, for instance, interest rates have risen between the time the builder made his futures contract and the time the contract is to be fulfilled. In that case, the price at which he is able to buy Treasury bills on the market is cheaper than the price agreed upon in the contract. The builder makes a profit. However, since interest rates have risen, the builder has, in effect, taken a loss on his construction loan. Conversely, if interest rates fall and the builder loses on his Treasury bill contract, he still realizes a "gain" on his construction loan. By having the loss and gain cancel out each other, the hedge makes the cost of the construction loan constant, amounting to an "almost-fixed-rate" loan.

The process generally requires a series of futures contracts which are made and sold at various times over the life of the construction loan. "The actual number of instruments I'll use depends on how the draws are made on the construction loan," says Ross. Four contracts to hedge a one-year loan is not uncommon. The cost, however, is relatively modest: about $70 for every million dollars of the contract, according to Ross. There is also a margin requirement, meaning the builder must deposit a certain percentage of the face amount of the contract with the securities broker. The requirement is usually about $3,000 per million dollars of the contract, more if interest rate movements decrease the value of the contract.

"The key to the hedge," explains Ross, "is an instrument that fluctuates as close as possible to prime." This is so the gains and losses on futures contracts and construction loans match evenly and result in an overall fixed cost. So while Ginnie Mae futures, for instance, might be used to set up a hedge, Ross prefers the 90-day Treasury bills.

Still, he emphasizes that the prime rate and Treasury bill rates do not rise and fall in synch. The scheme is not a "pure" hedge, then, since the Treasury bill loss or gain is not necessarily equal to the construction loan loss or gain. To set up a "pure" hedge, says Ross, the construction loan and futures contract would have to be tied to the same rate, the 90-day Treasury bill rate, for instance. Then the losses and gains would match up evenly and the cost of the scheme to the builder would be the small transaction costs. Ross says he is now talking to four major banks to convince them to make construction loans based on the 90-day Treasury bill rate rather than prime.

A final note: Ross notes that hedging isn't limited to construction financing. It can also be used, for instance, to lock in the cost of a market-rate mortgage commitment or the cost of plywood or lumber for future construction. However, unless one is experienced in the futures market or has in-house talent capable of setting up the often complex series of transactions needed to effect the hedge, Ross suggests seeking help from an expert in the field.

"Remember, you're hedging, not speculating," he warns. "That's where too many people go broke."

2. Pegging the loan to Eurodollars

It's something that only larger builders can do. But those who go this route find that drawing on the Eurodollar credit market can cut their short-term borrowing costs.

The Eurodollar market consists of U.S. dollar deposits held outside the United States by international banks and foreign branches of domestic banks. Canadian banks are also active lenders of Eurodollars. Much the same as U.S. banks lend money to each other in the Federal Reserve system, banks dealing in the Eurodollar market sell deposits to each other. The rate at which they do this is known as LIBOR, the London Interbank Offered Rate, so named because London is the center for trading Eurodollar deposits. When a Eurodollar loan is made, the rate is quoted as LIBOR plus a spread.

What some companies—U.S. Home to name one—have set up is a credit facility that features a prime/LIBOR option. This means the borrower can decide whether the interest rate on his loan will be pegged to the prime rate or LIBOR. There are several advantages to this option. One is that the two rates often are not equal. In fact, borrowings tied to LIBOR are very often cheaper than those tied to prime. This is due, in part, to the fact that there is no reserve requirement for Eurodollar deposits, which lowers the cost of funds for lenders. Tough competition among lenders in the international market also contributes to the attractiveness of LIBOR.

This works to the advantage of the borrower. "He knows what LIBOR is and he knows what prime is," says Bert Lewis, president of Sybedon Corp., a New York City real estate finance and consulting firm. "He can look at both rates and decide whether the loan draw will be on a prime or LIBOR basis."

The difference can be substantial. Tom Napoli, vice president-treasurer of U.S. Home, notes that over the last two years spreads of 1½ to 2 points between the two rates have not been unusual. He adds that the two rates don't move up and down together either, prime usually being more "sticky" than LIBOR. "After the last three peaks, prime has come down very slowly," observes Napoli. At one point, he says, this stickiness resulted in a prime rate six points higher than LIBOR.

Another advantage to Eurodollar borrowings, says Napoli, is "you have the ability to lock in a rate for one, two, three, six or twelve months." The borrower and lender agree to the fixed rate and term of the loan on a case-by-case basis. One time the borrower might want to lock in the rate for a month. Another time he might want to keep that rate for a year. Combined with the option to borrow at prime, this ability to fix the interest rate for up to a year gives the borrower great flexibility. If he expects short-term rates to go up, he can lock in at LIBOR. If he thinks rates are headed down, he can take the prime and wait until rates take off again before locking in at LIBOR.

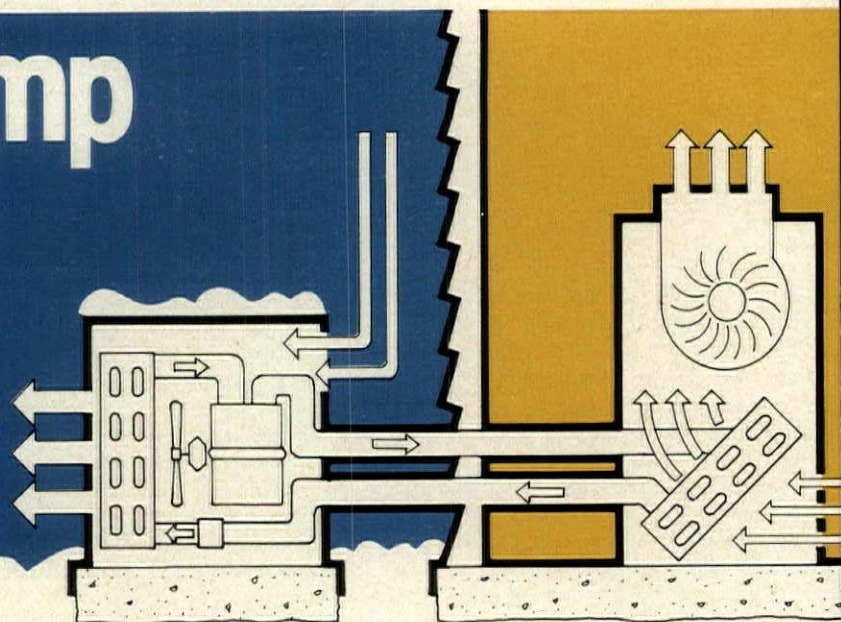

For example: At the end of September, 1980, U.S. Home borrowed $30 million at ¾% above LIBOR, which was approximately 13.5% at that time. The rate was fixed until the end of December. On October 1, 1980 prime was the same as LIBOR, 13.5%. By the end of October, however, prime had jumped to 14.5%. At the end of November, prime was at 17.75%. It kept going up and eventually peaked at 21.5% on December 19, where it remained until January 2. By locking in at LIBOR, U.S. Home avoided the interest charge increases that borrowers tied to prime paid over that three-month period.

But beware, cautions Napoli: "You're hooked on the other side." Once you take the Eurodollar loan for a certain term, you're tied to that rate for that term. If rates go down afterward, you're stuck at the higher rate. Only by paying what amounts to a prepayment penalty can you pay off the Eurodollar loan and then borrow again, either at prime or LIBOR. The fixed-rate, fixed-term Eurodollar loan offers certainty and the chance to lock in low rates, but the flip side is the possibility of being locked into a high rate loan when short-term rates are falling.

"It's a whole new phenomenon in this industry," says Napoli, referring to Eurodollar borrowings and the prime/LIBOR option, "but these deals have been around for a while." Still, at the present, these deals are pretty much limited to big borrowers with sterling credit ratings.

Heat Pump Update

How a 1950s Innovation Keeps Pace With Today's Energy Demands

Heat pumps have been on the market since the '50s, but it took the energy crunch of the '70s to win them acceptance among builders.

These units save energy because they provide two or three times more thermal energy than the amount of electrical energy they consume. And they function as both a heating and air conditioning unit. Last year they were installed in about 26% of all new single-family homes.

Basically, all heat pumps work on the following principle:

When operating as an air conditioner, they collect heat from the air in the house and transfer it outside. When operating as a heating unit, refrigerant in an outside coil picks up heat from the air (all air contains some heat regardless of temperature). As the refrigerant is heated, it turns into a gas which is channeled into a compressor. Here it becomes a hotter, higher-pressure vapor. This vapor is channeled to an indoor coil where it condenses, giving up its heat to indoor air that is then circulated through the house. The cooler the outside air, the less efficient the unit will be, and the more often back-up electrical resistance heat will be needed.

Most heat pumps marketed today use air as the heat source and the heat sink. But they're a far cry from the early models of the '50s and '60s. Not only have there been many improvements to the basic product since those days, but some entirely new types of heat pumps have been introduced.

So a builder who's thinking of specifying heat pumps for his houses must do some homework to find exactly the right type and model. Here are some of the things to look for.

Air-source heat pumps: Some improvements and some new products

The first heat pumps did not perform well in the heating mode. "Originally we just had a cooling system with a reversing valve and called it a heat pump," says Larry Raffensberger, residential products marketing manager, York Division of Borg-Warner Corp., York, Pa. "But competitive pressures and the natural tendency to improve products forced the industry to come up with better compressors, increased coil surface and other improvements."

Among those improvements:

An outdoor thermostat. This keeps the back-up resistance heat from coming on until the outside temperature reaches the balance point, defined as the temperature at which the increasing heat loss of the house equals the declining output of the heat pump (usually between 20°F and 40°F).

At the balance point, the pump can fill the house's heating needs when running continuously. Below it, the pump needs help from back-up heaters. Before outdoor sensors were added, the back-up heaters often kicked on before necessary.

Improved defrosting. When the pump operates in the heating mode, frost often forms on the outdoor coil. To get rid of it, the pump reverses cycles and pumps warm air from the house to the outside. This melts the frost on the coils, but also wastes heat.

In the past, many heat pumps went into the defrost cycle at certain intervals, say every 30 minutes or every 60 minutes, whether needed or not. Now, some models feature a device that measures the temperature in the coil.

As ice builds on the coil, its temperature drops. The defrost cycle does not switch on until the coil reaches a certain temperature. Generally, this reduces the number of defrost cycles, avoiding unnecessary loss of heat.

Add-on systems: A bid for the retrofit market

Basically, an add-on system is a standard heat pump with no resistance elements for back-up heat, but with controls that hook up to a standard oil or gas-fired furnace. Any system with forced-air ductwork can accommodate an add-on heat pump.

As long as the temperature remains above the balance point, the heat pump provides the heat. But when it gets down below the balance point, the furnace takes over.

New Rating System

In the past, the Air Conditioning and Refrigeration Institute published ratings on air source pumps' performance at specific temperatures: Cooling was at 95°F outdoor temperature, heating at 47°F and 17°F.

This system yielded cooling values called Energy Efficient Ratios (EER—the ratio of the cooling capacity to the power input) and heating values called Coefficient Of Performance (COP—the ratio of heating capacity provided to total electrical input). These values were helpful when comparing one brand of pump to another, but they didn't help in calculating a product's life cycle costs or comparing heat pumps to other energy systems that are available to builders.

"This solves two problems," says Vern Rydbeck, manager for electrical energy utilization and development for General Electric, Schenectady, N.Y. "Oil furnaces are inefficient at moderate temperatures when heat pumps are at their best. As the ambient temperature drops, the heat pump becomes less efficient, and the oil furnace becomes more efficient. So both units can operate under conditions that are the best for them."

Rydbeck reports that an add-on heat pump can cut 40% to 50% from an oil heating bill.

Although some builders are using the add-on systems in new construction, especially with gas-fired furnaces, most of the market seems to be aimed at the 15 million existing homes with oil furnaces.

The add-on heat pump contributes another term to the heat pump lexicon: economic balance point. This is the point at which the cost of heating with the heat pump equals the cost of heating with the other fuel. If the economic balance point is higher than the application balance point, the system should switch at the economic point. If lower, the system will switch at the application balance point because the heat pump can't heat the house below that point. The savings, however, will not be as great.

Ground water heat pumps: New to the housing market

This device uses ground water as a heat source in the winter and a heat sink in the summer. And since ground water temperatures remain fairly constant, the pump's output remains stable. This is an advantage over air-source heat pumps that fluctuate in efficiency as the outside temperature rises and falls.

Ground water heat pumps are relatively new to the residential market, although a version has been used for some time in commercial and multi-family structures.

The equipment now on the market allows heat pumps to operate in water temperatures as low as 40°F and to be connected to an underground water source. Last year about 12,000 such units were installed in houses.

The National Water Well Association, Worthington, Ohio, estimates that by 1990 nine out of every ten homes built on quarter acre or larger lots will have a ground water heat pump.

Not everyone is that optimistic, however. John Oyer, sales manager for water heat pumps at Friedrich Air Conditioning and Refrigeration, San Antonio, says, "They are gaining more and more of the market, but some people thought that since they are so efficient, they would just take off on their own. It doesn't work like that."

Most people say the new industry is still in its infancy, and it will be a while before anyone can tell just how big the market is going to be.

But no matter how many are installed, Jim Pavlman, director of contractor services for the National Water Well Association, says a ground water heat pump can cut energy bills by one third to one half. A report released last November by the association and performed for DOE concluded that in the nine test cities studied, the ground water heat pump used 20% to 60% less energy for heating than a conventional air heat pump. The difference went from 10% to 60% when both heating and cooling energy requirements were simulated.

"Theoretically, the water heat pump is more efficient than the air pump because the output is more or less fixed," says Winslow Fuller of Equinox, a Petersborough, N.H. energy consulting firm. He warns, however, that there are two requirements:

1. The well must contain good quality water, and
2. There must be an adequate water supply.

If the well water is not of good quality, the waterside heat exchanger will corrode and scale. "It can get so bad that the day the heat pump is installed is the best the unit will operate," says York's Raffensberger. "From then on, the system becomes less and less efficient."

Manufacturers can supply information on what water conditions best suit their equipment. And the builder can get some idea of water quality from a U.S. Geological Survey Office.

Not only must the water be of good quality, but there must be plenty of it to keep the system working. And the lower the water temperature, the more water needed to heat the refrigerant. One major manufacturer says that if the water temperature is 55°F, his company's three-ton unit has a flow rate of 2½ gallons to 3 gallons per minute. If the temperature is 50°F, it is 5 gallons per minute. Forty-five degree water must flow at the rate of 10 gallons per minute.

Some people discharge the water, once it has passed through the system, into a stream or lake or even a municipal water system. But this could contribute to a ground water shortage. The National Water Well Association

Considers Seasonal and Geographical Variations

A new DOE rating system, which ARI will publish, calls for the same temperature tests, plus an additional one for cooling and new tests for cycling, the continual switching on and off of the unit to meet the requirements of the house, and frost accumulation.

"The new rating assumes that the unit will cycle," says Raffensberger, "and that different conditions will occur in the house. It is more representative of what happens in the real world."

The DOE system also looks at how the product will perform in different parts of the country. For testing purpose, the nation is divided up into five regions and the unit is tested against the conditions in each region.

By using the new method, manufacturers will be able to provide data on how the products will perform over the course of a heating or cooling season—yielding a Seasonal COP—rather than under constant conditions. Thus the new ratings will probably be a little lower than the old ones.

For example, DOE tested a product under the new system that the manufacturer claimed had a COP of 2.6 at 47°F and 1.8 at 17°F. In region I—the warmest region of the country with 500 to 1,000 heating load hours—the unit had a Seasonal Coefficient Of Performance (SCOP) of 2.2. In region 5—the coldest area in the country, with 2,500 to 3,000 heat load hours—the unit's SCOP was 1.47 to 1.6.

The actual rating for the product will be given as its Heating Seasonal Performance Factor (HSPF), but we chose SCOP to compare the two systems, according to Richard Dudley, program manager for the Consumer Products Efficiency Branch of DOE. He adds that the HSPF equals the SCOP times 3.413 (number of Btus in a watt hour). So instead of a COP rating of 2, the new rating will be a HSPF of 6.8. Cooling capacity will be listed as Seasonal Energy Efficient Ratio (SEER).

"Any product that makes a claim of energy efficiency has to be tested with this procedure," says Dudley. "This way there is one standard set of tests, and the industry has something that can be policed."

recommends that each heat pump installation include two wells: One to draw the water into the system; the other to return the slightly warmer or cooler water to the underground aquifer. The water can be drawn and returned to the same or a different underground source. If returned to a different aquifer, the installer should make sure the water in the two areas is of the same quality. If returned to the same source, the wells should be about 100 feet apart so the slightly cooler or warmer water from one well does not interfere with the other.

Pavhlman explains why the separation is necessary: "If you pump from one well and then return the water to the same well, you are just recirculating the water. It is like pumping from a barrel. But two wells, even if they are in the same aquifer, keep the temperature difference separate, because underground water flows only a few inches a year."

Obviously the more wells the more expensive the heat pump installation. If the home relies on a well for its potable water, this well can do double duty. The builder then adds only the cost of one well to the heat pump installation. A well costs between $1,500 and $3,000.

The study mentioned earlier estimates that the price of a ground water heat pump with one well is between $3,900 and $6,100. The price with two wells can be as much as $9,000. An air heat pump costs between $3,200 and $4,300, while a conventional electric heating and cooling system is in the $3,500 range. Not everyone will agree with these prices, but it should be remembered they are ranges that consider the cost of top-of-the-line equipment, ductwork and installation charges at different locations.

According to the survey, a ground water heat pump with one well would have a 1.5 year payback when installed in Concord, N.H. in place of an all-electric system. A two-well system would take 3.7 years to pay back. However, when compared to an air heat pump, the payback period for a two-well system is 12.5 years. In Houston, a one-well unit will take 17.2 years to pay back when compared to an all electric system. But a one-well model would take more than 20 years when compared to an air heat pump.

Water heater heat pumps: A new product with promise

The water heater heat pump gathers energy from a basement or conditioned space and uses it to heat water in a tank. Unlike the standard heat pump, it doesn't reverse.

Three companies now manufacture water heater heat pumps. One offers a unit where the pump and water tank are attached; the other two provide remote units that are connected to the existing water tank and are geared to the retrofit market. One company is now testing a combined unit.

Fedders Corp., Edison, N.J., which markets a remote system under the Airtemp brand name, says the system can cut electric water heating bills by 64% and reduce oil water heating bills by 62%.

DOE is currently sponsoring field tests involving 100 heat pump water heaters used in cities from New England to Hawaii. Robert Dunning, president of Energy Utilization Systems, Inc., Pittsburgh, the company that manufactures the combined unit, says that preliminary results indicate the units are cutting hot water bills in half. DOE is using prototype models for the tests, but savings should get up to the 60% range for production models, according to Dunning.

There isn't much choice on where in the home to put a retrofitted heat pump water heater: It is hooked up to the existing water heater.

But in new construction, proper placement of the system can help the homeowner cut down further on the energy used to heat water. For instance, Energy Utilization Systems recommends that installers put the heat pump in a utility room or conditioned space when building in the South. By placing the pump in a conditioned space, the unit can fill some of the house's air conditioning requirements (by taking heat from the air they return cool air to the room). Newer models will include a duct system for this purpose.

In the North, however, the unit should be confined to an unheated basement or furnace room. If placed in a conditioned space, the heat pump would be using heated air to heat the water, thus cutting down on energy savings. But in a furnace room, the unit can use waste heat.

If a furnace room isn't available, an unheated basement can provide the necessary heat source. Generally, the basement temperature won't go below 55°F because of the insulating ability of the earth. Once the pump begins drawing on the air in the basement, the temperature will drop, but the temperature loss will be moderated because of the heat from the surrounding earth.

Choosing the proper spot for installation is important because the units will work only within certain temperature ranges which vary from manufacturer to manufacturer. Energy Utilization says that its product can function between 45°F and 100°F.

The combined unit costs $1,100 as compared to about $300 to $350 for a standard hot water heater. Dunning expects prices to drop to $650 to $700 once the volume builds up.

The remote systems made by Fedders and E-Tech of Atlanta sell for $700 to $900. When Fedders' combination unit comes on the market "it will probably cost less than the remote system because it won't have as many controls," says a company spokesman. "There are times when the pump goes on just to measure the water in the tank. But in the combined unit the thermostat will be mounted right on top of the tank."

The manufacturers feel the products should offer a three- to four-year payback. They point out that that is about half the payback time expected for a solar domestic hot water system. Such comparisons to solar are natural, for the manufacturers want water heater heat pumps covered under the federal energy tax credit program. Last December Fedders submitted an application for certification to the IRS. The agency has not yet made a decision.

According to a study by Oakridge National Laboratory, the water heater heat pumps save as much energy as solar domestic hot water and can be installed for one third to one fourth the cost, says Dunning. "They concluded the pumps were more worthy of the credit than solar," says Dunning. But, "solar has all the emotion right now and they say solar is free. But nothing is free."

Tandem Wall and Roof/Ceiling Systems Cut Labor And Energy Costs

One system is for the wall, the other for the roof. And both are members of the Homasote Co.'s family of insulating systems developed around a single sheathing/siding product, the Thermasote® insulated building panel.*

The newer of the two is the Thermasote® Plus Sidewall System. Used in conjunction with conventional wall construction—including 3½ in. of fiberglass batting and interior wallboard—the Thermasote® panel can provide an R-value of 20—thus satisfying the R-19 value often required by local building codes.

In addition to the insulation value this product contributes, Thermasote® panels can also reduce installation time and labor costs. Since the exposed side of the Thermasote® panel is nailable, finishing siding, including shingles and stucco, can be applied directly to it. The exterior-grade surface is also preprimed for painting; battens can be used to conceal the joints (see photo right).

The sidewall system is recommended for retrofit construction, especially where it would be difficult to insulate with batts or blown-in material. Thermasote® panels, which have a Class II fire rating, may be installed over any structurally sound siding or over masonry. Furring strips are used to level off uneven surfaces.

Thermasote® sidewall panels come in standard 4' x 8', 10' and 12' sizes. The 1.2-in. thickness is recommended for achieving the R-20 value. (That thickness is also compatible with window and door jamb sizes.) Other thicknesses are also available.

The sidewall system is an offshoot of an insulated roofing system which has recently undergone a major improvement—namely the development of a Thermasote® panel with four inches of insulation.

This system includes two Homasote Co. products: the improved 4-in.-thick Thermasote® panel and the Easy-Ply® roof decking, a 100% wood-fiber structural panel. Those components, plus finishing elements such as felt paper and shingles or tiles, form a roof/ceiling system with an R-value of up to 35 (see cross-section facing page).

The system is recommended for vaulted ceilings or open-beam construction. The system has been most popular in areas where those types of construction are typical, such as California, Florida, and northern regions, where pitched roofs and vaulted ceilings are common.

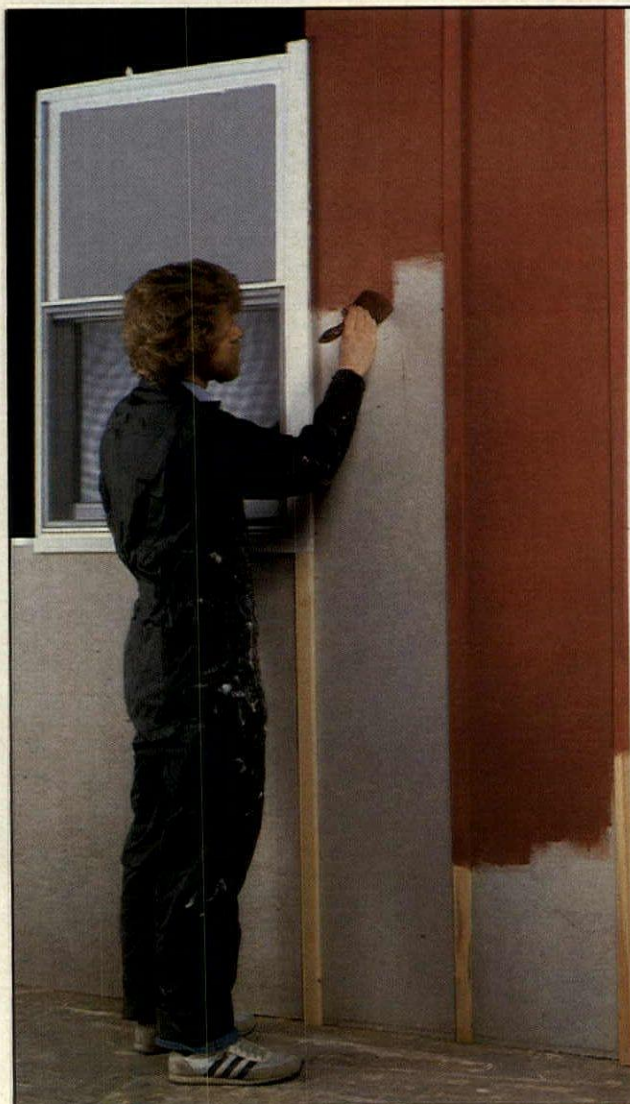

As with the sidewall system, the roofing system provides a finished surface—in this case a decorative white ceiling which can be left exposed in open-beam construction (see photo facing page). The manufacturer has just introduced a woodgrain finish as well.

The insulated ceiling panels come in 3' x 4' or 4' x 8' sizes; the decking is a nominal 2' x 8'. And both are easy to cut and install.

For more information on both the new sidewall system and the improved roofing system, circle 200 on reader service card

—JENNIFER A. WAGNER

* Thermasote® consists of a nailable building board, with a rigid polyurethane foam and a backer sheet of asphalt-saturated felt or fiberglass.

Sidewall panels provide an exterior-grade nailable surface that can be painted, as shown above, or finished with siding, as shown at right. In the latter case, a layer of building paper should be installed over the Thermasote® before the application of shingles or shakes. Other sidings can be used as recommended.

The Sidewall System— It Was a Builder's Idea!

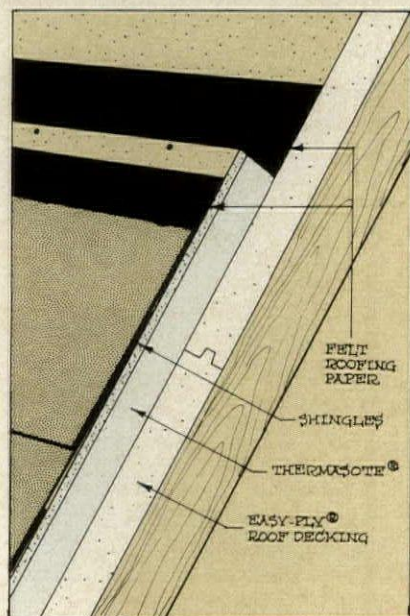

Bob Terossi of Quechee, Vt. had built several solar homes using the Thermasote® roofing system and conventional insulation/sheathing/siding construction on the walls.

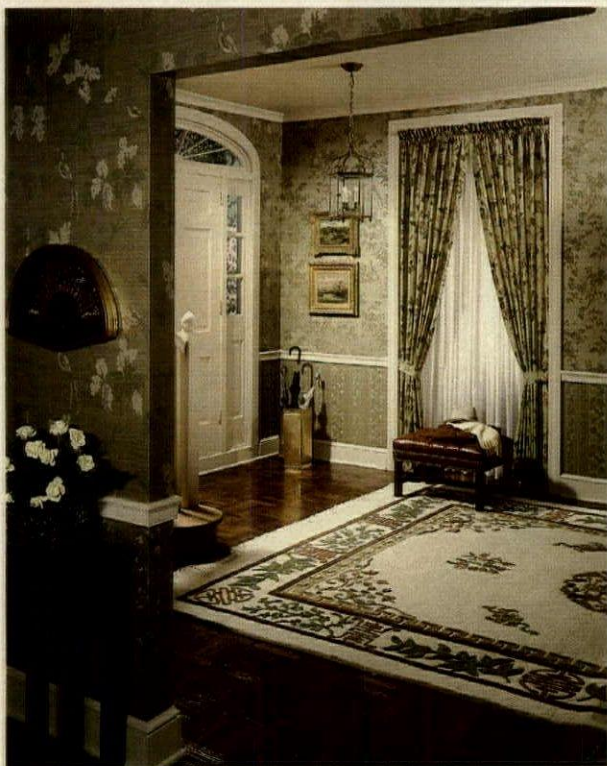

That's when he got the idea of turning the insulated roofing panel on its end—and using it as a sheathing/siding product. He gave the company a call, and suggested that the roofing panel could also be an excellent sidewall panel, providing a little extra insulation and a good nail base for siding—without adding any more work. The company took his suggestion, modifying the size and thickness of the roofing panel to make it suitable for use on the walls.

“That's the best way to develop a new product,” says Craig Moore at Homasote, “to have someone in the field tell us what to do!”

Energy-saving roof system is recommended for use in high, open-beam installations, as shown above. The system consists of several layers, as illustrated at left: the Easy-Ply® roof decking, which provides a finished ceiling surface; 4-in.-thick Thermasote® panel; felt roofing paper; and finish roofing, such as shingles. Roof decking complies with a number of building codes, including BOCA, ICBO and FHA.

Sell the Gas Advantage:

Energy Savings Payback.

Most people looking for a home today probably already know the advantages of gas. If not, tell them the selling points:

That gas is America's most efficient energy system. New gas heating systems and appliances with energy-saving features make gas even more efficient. They save money in operating costs all the years they are used. That savings is called Energy Savings Payback (ESP).

For example, the ESP on a new efficient gas furnace can save up to $1,500* over a 17-year period, compared to a conventional gas furnace. The ESP on a new gas water heater can be $400* over a 10-year period. Savings would be even greater compared to other, more expensive energy systems.

Provide the gas advantage. You'll find it a lot easier selling a home that offers the utmost in energy efficiency. And low operating costs can help more home buyers qualify for mortgages. So, with gas, you and your customers both profit.

*Government testing procedures were used to determine all annual operating costs.

It helps sell homes.

HOW TO PLAN, SITE AND MERCHANDISE

THE SMALLER, HIGHER-DENSITY HOUSE

Two days of intensive study in... Site Planning, Floor Planning, Merchandising and Model Presentations for Townhouses, Duplexes, and Patio Homes

Here's why you should attend...

Because today's rapidly rising land development and construction costs have made the small house homebuilding's key product for the immediate future

Because small houses demand special skills in siting, planning and merchandising if they are to be successful in the marketplace

And because prospects have to be sold on a different kind of lifestyle before you can turn them into small-house buyers

Housing's "How to Plan, Site and Merchandise the Smaller, Higher-Density House" seminar will show you...

How to site medium and high-density housing

How to design small houses that appeal to specific market segments

How to effectively merchandise small houses to these specific markets

Washington, DC, Sept. 17-18

Marriott Hotel West End

Newport Beach, CA, Oct. 19-20

Marriott Hotel

Maui, Hawaii, Nov. 16-17

Hyatt Regency

Denver, CO, Dec. 7-8

Fairmont Hotel

Specifically, you'll study these key subjects:

Site Planning:

- Why site-planning subtleties become critical as living units become smaller
- How to avoid the "toy village" look of small-home developments
- How to increase density without sacrificing market appeal
- How to provide privacy in high-density housing
- How to develop street patterns based on actual need rather than out-moded conventions
- How to determine how much common space is needed and where it should be
- How to design for and around the automobile
- How to handle the problems of garage doors, narrow front elevations and setbacks

Product Design:

- How to create floor plans that feel—and live—bigger than they really are
- How to relate floor plans to density
- How to make the most of smaller living spaces—indoors and outdoors

Single Family Attached and Detached,

- How to gear floor plans to specific market segments
- How to use natural light to open up tight floor plans
- How to maximize square footage in key areas
- How to make creative use of interior volume

Merchandising and Model Presentation:

- How to create models that show buyers the comfort of living in a small space
- How to make your models appeal to market groups
- How to scale furnishings for small houses
- How to use color and light effectively
- How to present the unfurnished model effectively

You'll study with Barry A. Berkus, AIA, president and founder of the Berkus Group Architects with offices in Santa Barbara and Santa Ana, CA, and Washington, DC; Walter J. Richardson, AIA, president of Richardson-Nagy-Martin, an architectural and planning firm based in Newport Beach, CA, and Gene E. IF YOU'RE USING WOOD SHELVING, YOU'RE PROBABLY GETTING NAILED.

SPACE BUILDER BRAND VENTILATED SHELVING BY CLOSET MAID.

One thing often hidden in the closet is the true cost of building it. That is, when you use wood shelving.

The reason is, when the costs of the trim crew and painters are spread over a two to three day period, they're easy to lose track of. No wonder it's hard for you to uncover the cost of cutting shelves, supports and rods—much less the cost of painting them.

Space Builder brand ventilated shelving offers you a better alternative to wood shelving. Because one person can install it in minutes—using just a drill and a screwdriver. And there's no sanding, painting or staining required. That means you can often cut a day or more off building schedules. And a bundle off costs.

Space Builder also holds up better than wood shelving. There's no warping, cracking, splintering or peeling. The result? Virtually no callbacks.

So avoid getting nailed with the extra costs—and problems—of wood. Look to Space Builder. From every angle, it's looking better every day. Contact T. Galloway, Director of Sales, Closet Maid Corporation, 720 S.W. 17th St., Ocala, FL 32670. Or call 904/732-8734.

Would you like to look a year into your market's future...

...and see how big it will be? Whether it will be growing or shrinking? What kind of housing it will want? And what price or rent ranges will be safest — or riskiest?

Of course you would. It takes you at least a year to go from project planning to opening, and your market can change drastically in that time. You can easily find yourself stuck with the wrong product at the wrong price.

So if there were a way to anticipate — accurately — the right product at the right price, that would be financial and competitive protection you couldn't afford to be without — especially in today's housing economy.

Well, there is a way to forecast your market accurately — the Housing Market Reports.

They were developed by Dr. Alfred J. Gobar, the country's leading real-estate market analyst. They're based on the same proven projective techniques Dr. Gobar has used for many years in market studies for such clients as Aetna Life, Broadmoor Homes, Mission Viejo, Johns-Manville and the Ford Foundation. And they're the basis of the Housing Demand Index, the famous red and green dots that appear quarterly in Housing Magazine.

Now Real Estate Economics Group has created a new computerized program from Dr. Gobar's data base. It covers each of the country's 125 key housing markets. And it gives you — on a single page — the information you need to forecast your market.

Here's what a Housing Market Report will tell you about your particular market.

- How much demand will increase or decrease over the next 12 months, what's being built to meet that demand, and by how much your market is being under-built or overbuilt.
- What the pent-up demand is, hence how long your market can withstand overbuilding.
- What the relation is between prices or rents and what people can afford, so you know what price or rent levels to shoot for — or stay away from.

A Housing Market report will give you this data for both single- and multifamily housing, and break it down by quarter so you can spot trends. It will update the information every three months. And it will evaluate the market and recommend what kind of development has the best chance of success.

Housing Market Reports are the most effective — and least expensive — market insurance you can buy.

Because they're computerized, they can be priced at a fraction of what you'd pay for a conventional market study. A year's subscription, which will bring you four quarterly reports, costs just $400 for one market, $200 for each additional market.

We'd like you to judge for yourself how valuable the Housing Market Reports can be to you. Fill in the coupon below and send it to us. We'll send you a sample report, show you how it works, and give you a list of all the markets available.

Sales- Effective & Marketing & Design

Two days of intensive study in...

Market & Consumer Research
Competitive Analysis
Marketing & Merchandising
Strategies
Advertising & Communications
Techniques
Site Planning
Product Design

Here's why you should attend

Because even after a slow, shaky start the 1980s promise to be the biggest boom years in housing history.

Because to take full advantage of this boom you have to know...who your buyers are...what they want...and how to reach them.

Because with higher interest rates and housing costs accepted facts of life, the requirements of those price-sensitive buyers are changing rapidly.

Because today's homebuyers are more definite than ever about...why they buy...what they buy...and how much they're willing to spend.

And, because to sell housing in the '80s a competitive edge is crucial. You need a professional approach to research, marketing and product design.

Housing's Sales-Effective Marketing & Design seminar will show you...

How to identify your buyers and their wants and needs

How to design housing to appeal to those buyers and their pocketbooks

And, how to effectively market your housing to those buyers

Newport Beach, CA, Sept. 24-25, Newporter Inn
Washington, DC, Oct. 12-13, International Hotel
Denver, CO, Nov. 5-6, Brown Palace

Specifically, you'll learn...

Market research

- How to gather meaningful data on your market
- How to analyse economic facts and trends
- How to document the volume and characteristics of housing demand in your area
- How to judge price sensitivity in your market

Consumer research

- How to identify your target market
- How to determine housing preferences and prejudices
- How to assess buyers' willingness—and ability—to pay your price
- How to evaluate their reactions to your product

Competitive analysis

- How to get the maximum benefit from shopping your competition
- How to determine what products are being built in your area and how they're selling
- How to discover which price ranges and financing packages attract your potential buyers

- How to present your housing so it stands out in the marketplace

Marketing

- How to develop a comprehensive marketing plan
- How to create an overall project identity
- How to establish and administer a sensible marketing budget
- How to use financing packages as marketing tools

Merchandising

- How to take advantage of theme merchandising
- How to plan a practical, but impressive, model site
- How to decide when to furnish models and when not to
- What it takes to create an effective sales office at a reasonable price

Communications

- How to build a strong advertising and public relations program
- How to stretch your media dollars
- How well-coordinated graphics contribute to a strong project theme
- How to design effective brochures and sales promotions

Site planning

- How to maximize the salability of your site
- How to plan your site to reflect the lifestyle of your target market
- How to deal with common space and recreation areas
- How to select the best spot for your model and sales office

Product design

- How to translate your buyers' wants and needs into salable products
- How to design floor plans directed at specific market segments
- How to create plans that stretch your market's buying power
- How to design housing with energy efficiency in mind

And, you'll also hear...

- How to use design features as a merchandising tool
- Where to compromise when price is the controlling factor
- How to turn plans that don't sell into plans that do
- How to get the most from your architect

You'll study with William J. Devereaux, Jr., manager of the east coast division of Berkus Group Architects in Washington, DC; Lester Goodman, president of his own marketing services company, Lester Goodman Associates, in Brea, CA and Lewis M. Goodkin, president of Goodkin Research Corporation, a real estate and marketing firm based in Ft. Lauderdale, FL.

Read Up on Insulation, Lumber and Other 'Basics'

A 60-page guide presents the properties and applications of plywood and other APA® panels for residential and commercial projects. The comprehensive manual contains up-to-date information and recommendations on such subjects as:

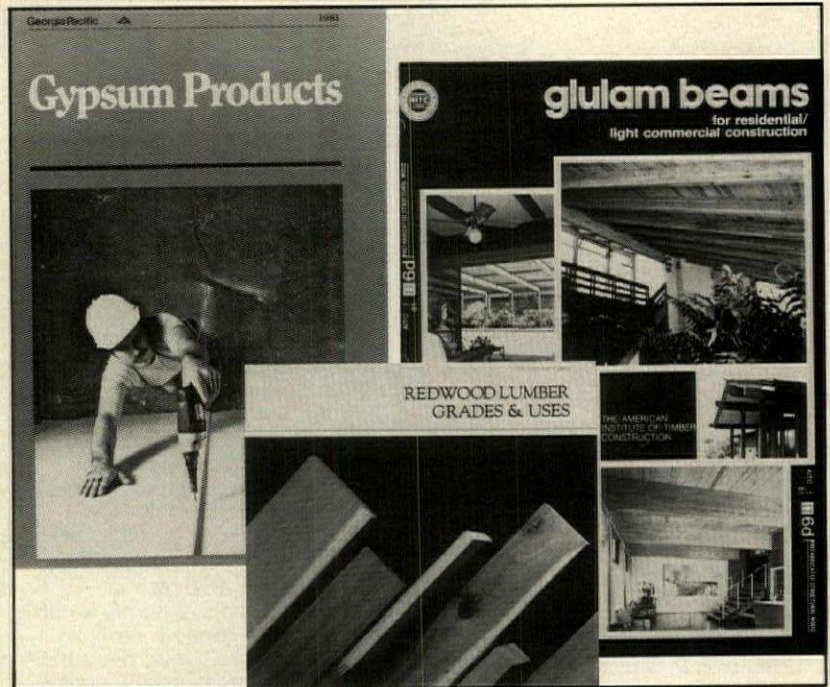

- the design and installation of floor, wall and roof systems using APA® panels
- the design of fire-rated systems
- finishing methods

Four-color photographs and drawings illustrate such design features, and much of the information is summarized in tabular form. American Plywood Assn. Circle 300 on reader service card

Also from the same association: a 38-page booklet on an all-weather wood foundation system (AWWF). Called a "Boon for Builders and Buyers," the foundation system is fully described and illustrated with photos and drawings. The system's advantages include fast construction, strength, versatility and ease of finishing, according to the booklet. System components are detailed, and construction techniques outlined in copy and drawings. Suggestions for the selection of lumber, plywood and fasteners for a typical AWWF system are also included. Circle 301 on reader service card

A cost comparison of galvanized steel vs. wood framing is the subject of a 12-page booklet. Based on an independently researched study, the booklet details home framing costs for one-, two-story and bilevel houses in six major American cities. The study asserts that appreciable savings can be realized by using steel framing. Also outlined are other advantages of using steel framing members rather than conventional wood ones. Photographs, floor plans and tables are included. The Zinc Institute. Circle 302 on reader service card

The use of glulam beams in residential and light commercial construction is the subject of an eight-page brochure (see photo above right). Four-color photographs and drawings illustrate typical construction details and applications. Specs are included. The American Institute of Timber Construction. Circle 303 on reader service card

A revised catalog of thermal/acoustical insulation products is available. The 39-page catalog describes insulation available in tubular, block, board, sheet and roll forms for use in a wide variety of applications. The catalog also lists product advantages, available forms and dimensions, and a number of physical properties, such as density and moisture absorption capabilities. Johns-Manville. Circle 304 on reader service card

The structural advantages of Ox-board™ oriented strand board are detailed in a four-page pamphlet. Tables compare the span capabilities of Oxboard™ to those of plywood and waferboard. A selection guide is included. Potlatch. Circle 305 on reader service card

A two-page spec sheet describes the advantages of using this manufacturer's nail-on truss plates. Standard plate dimensions and typical nail patterns are illustrated with line drawings. Teco. Circle 306 on reader service card

The "silver lining," a layer of foil laminate, is the feature of the sheathing/underlayment described in a fold-out brochure. Product advantages, such as ease of installation, are described. Monticello. Circle 307 on reader service card

The variety of gypsum board products and systems available from this manufacturer are catalogued in a 20-page booklet. Product properties and benefits are described. Also discussed: gypsum board attachments and joint treatment products; specifications for non-loadbearing partitions; fire ratings. Line drawings illustrate construction details. Flintkote. Circle 308 on reader service card

A 52-page catalog of power tools is available. Product descriptions and photographs are included for the manufacturer's lines of drills, hole saws, hammer drills, woodworking tools, grinders and other tools. AEG. Circle 309 on reader service card

A four-color catalog (see photo above) contains technical data and system installation details for a complete line of gypsum products, including gypsum board, sheathing, plaster products and joint system materials. The 15-page publication is illustrated with charts and diagrams, and specifications are included. Georgia-Pacific. Circle 310 on reader service card

A floor truss fabrication system, composed of both wood and steel components, is described in a four-page publication. Photographs show the system being constructed and installed. Mon-ex. Circle 312 on reader service card

An eight-page foldout (see photo above) showcases three redwood siding products. Color photographs show applications of these and other redwood products in residential and commercial settings. The publication also identifies the benefits of using redwood lumber. California Redwood Assn. Circle 311 on reader service card

Spas made of USS Acrylic Sheet are clearly superior.

USS Continuous Cast Acrylic Sheet is the ideal material for both indoor and outdoor spas because it's durable, weather resistant and color stable. Its non-porous surface will hold up even after repeated exposure to the sun and weather. And it's not affected by the use of household cleansers and liquid cleaners. What's more, the acrylic surface remains warm and smooth to the touch even after years of use.

We make USS Acrylic Sheet in a wide variety of appealing, high gloss colors so that color match and color coordination is never a problem. We even make a marble sheet, in brown, black, blue and green.

If you would like to learn more about USS Acrylic Sheet, contact Don Bowman at USS Novamont, Inc., Subsidiary of United States Steel, 7350 Empire Drive, Florence, Kentucky 41042. Phone (606) 283-1501.

HOUSING Magazine's new Cost Guide offers builders unique cost control tool.

exclusive quarterly editorial feature which gives builders, contractors, and architects detailed costs of typical houses in key U.S. markets.

HOUSING Magazine's exclusive, new editorial feature—THE COST GUIDE published quarterly, will include valuable cost information in these major categories:

- FOUNDATIONS
- FLOORS ON GRADE
- ROOFING SYSTEMS
- ROOFING
- EXTERIOR WALLS
- PARTITIONS
- WALL FINISHES
- FLOOR FINISHES

- CEILING FINISHES
- FIXED EQUIPMENT
- HVAC
- PLUMBING
- ELECTRICAL

Within each category are the costs of labor and materials as well as cost per square foot of living area. Single-family detached homes and townhouses will be covered in alternating quarterly reports to provide a continuing update on each type of housing.

This new service for HOUSING's readers is the result of the cooperative efforts of HOUSING's editors and the McGraw-Hill Information Systems Company.

For builders, contractors and architects, HOUSING Magazine's Cost Guide is one more example of McGraw-Hill's vast construction data resources and our commitment to information that leads to action in the housing and light construction industry.

Two reasons to specify new Alcan WEATHERBUFFER™ aluminum windows instead of wood:

1. WEATHERBUFFER Brand Windows match the performance of wood...

Thermal efficiency of Alcan WEATHERBUFFER aluminum windows is competitive with or better than comparable wood windows. Six years of applied research has led to a breakthrough design called the Alcan LOMASS™ Dual Thermal Break. The combination of the PVC break and trapped "dead" air creates a super-effective dual insulation barrier. This new design attacks condensation problems—WEATHERBUFFER windows have scored condensation resistance ratings and U values better than or competitive with popular wood windows. And 3/4" thick triple glaze insulated glass is standard on WEATHERBUFFER windows.

2. But they aren't wood!

Easier installation is a key advantage of the Alcan WEATHERBUFFER system. The all-aluminum construction includes features which help make your construction job easier, quicker, and more profitable.

For example, WEATHERBUFFER windows include inside trim to fit a normal 4 1/2" wall and special "fins" on the window frame permit fast installation with no need for extra carpentry or sizing.

In addition, because WEATHERBUFFER windows are aluminum, they are virtually maintenance-free.

Ask for an Alcan WEATHERBUFFER try-out!

The WEATHERBUFFER line offers a full selection of popular window styles including single, mullied, bay, and bow windows. And right now, we have two great ways you can discover the WEATHERBUFFER difference for yourself.

Ask your Alcan dealer for information about our "Try and See" Program and our "Model Home" Program. We're ready to show you why the Alcan WEATHERBUFFER is the window system of the 80's.

"I LOVE THE NEIGHBORHOOD, THE SPACE, THE BAY WINDOW, AND THE YARD..."

BUT IS IT GAS?"

"Well, er, uh..."

Gas appliances are built-in selling features.

As America moves into the '80s, more Americans will be moving into new homes. But before they buy, they'll be asking the same question, "Is it energy-efficient?"

Homebuilders who have built gas appliances right into their homes can answer truthfully, "Yes."

You see, compared to electric, the new gas appliances are far more efficient for cooking, drying clothes, heating water, and heating homes.

Americans are buying efficiency. The national consumer information program sponsored by GAMA on television, radio, and in magazines is telling Americans how the increased efficiency of the new gas appliances saves them money and energy. And, they're looking for these new gas appliances in the homes they buy.

For you, the builder, the new gas appliances can mean the difference between a sale and a "Thank you, but I'm just looking."

The new gas appliances. Isn't it time you started building for your future?

HOW TO USE THIS BUYERS' GUIDE

This is a quick guide to the manufacturers who make products for homebuilding, non-residential construction, land development and property management.

Manufacturers are listed two ways: alphabetically and by product. There's also a special section on manufactured housing producers and another on trade and professional associations.

A bold-face listing means that a company has advertised in this issue, so you can find information about its products by turning to the page indicated.

When you want to reach a particular manufacturer

Look in Section 1, beginning on page 88. This is simply an alphabetical listing of housing product manufacturers, as well as their full addresses and telephone numbers.

When you want to know who makes a particular product

Look in Section 2, beginning on page 118. Products are listed alphabetically, with the relevant manufacturers shown under each heading. An index of the products included is on page 117.

To help you find the exact features and materials you're looking for, general product categories are broken into subcategories. These are indicated by codes which are explained at the beginning of each product category.

Thus, for example, if you were looking for prefinished aluminum insulating horizontal siding, you would: 1) turn to the product index on page 119, 2) locate "Siding—Horizontal," and 3) open the magazine to that product category. The key at the beginning of this entry would tell you the designation for prefinished is (pf), for aluminum, (a), and for insulating, (i). Only those siding manufacturers with (pf, a, i) next to their names would make the product you're looking for.

This section shows manufacturers' names and addresses only. To find telephone numbers, refer back to Section 1.

When you need information on manufactured housing

Look in Section 3, beginning on page 201. This is an alphabetical listing of the names, addresses and telephone numbers of producers of manufactured housing. Codes indicate the system used—modular/sectional, panelized, precut or mobile. They also indicate whether the units are designed for single-family, multifamily or other markets.

When you want additional information

Try the trade and professional associations listed in Section 4, beginning on page 206.

These groups are excellent reference sources, particularly for information on government and industry standards and regulations. Many offer technical specifications, booklets and other research materials.

When you put your best up here ...

You put your best into every home you build. So why not put our best around your homes? Quality ADS Polyethylene drainage tubing is perfect for all homesite and commercial drainage. Built tough, ADS should last the life of the home.

At a cost of just pennies per foot, ADS corrugated tubing is your best choice for basement, foundation and downspout drainage. Strong and durable, ADS tubing won't rust and resists rot and acidic or alkaline soils.

ADS heavy-duty tubing is lighter, easier to handle and requires less time and equipment to install than PVC, clay, concrete or corrugated metal. And, precision-made ADS snap-on fittings and couplings keep installation time and labor cost to a minimum.

ADS tubing is available through your local building supply-dealer. Ask for it by name. Our 21 manufacturing plants across the country assure you of readily available stock.

If you insist on quality in building materials, insist on ADS.

OPERATION WARM MAJIC:

THE FIREPLACE THAT CAME IN FROM THE COLD

"TELL YOUR PEOPLE THE FIREPLACE
HEATS EVEN BETTER THAN EXPECTED.
I HAVE NEW EVIDENCE."

If you build homes for top energy efficiency, you'd better build in this fireplace.

Because Majestic's new Warm Majic™ fireplace with its fan option can deliver about the same heating capacity as a typical gas furnace for a 1500 sq. ft. home.

And recent NAHB surveys show 9 of 10 home buyers want a fireplace. And 8 of 10 want a home that's energy efficient.

Well, this is the fireplace that lets you give them both.

And unlike typical masonry fireplaces that can suck all the home's heated air up the flue in about 30 minutes, Warm Majic reduces that heated-air loss by almost 90%.

The fact is, builders all over America are using Warm Majic to make their homes sell better.

Call your Majestic dealer. Or write us. Majestic makes the fireplace America wants most.
