DEAR READER

This issue contains lots of suggestions for happier entertaining. It also provides us with the chance to sound off on one of our favorite topics namely, getting the hostess back among the guests.

In the old days, a hostess was very much in evidence at her own party with a retinue of servants to back her up. She not only was allowed to mingle with the guests, she pretty much ran the show. When the conversation started to lag she was there to give it a shot in the arm. She was the one who could sweetly and gently shut up a loudmouth bore, and change the topic of conversation to something more stimulating. She was, in fact, very similar to the conductor of an orchestra bringing out the very best qualities of her guests, just as the conductor brings out the best qualities of his musicians and the music.

The traditional role of the host, on the other hand, was simply to sit opposite the hostess and pour the wine, keep quiet and smile.

Today, things are different. The host is very much in evidence, but you almost never see the hostess. She spends those happy hours in the kitchen preparing and serving all the goodies, waiting on table, and doing various and sundry scullery activities. If she does manage to join the group for a few brief moments it's only a matter of minutes before she must rush back to attend to some other culinary activity. At the table, you can't really expect too much from her in the way of spirited talk because the poor girl is probably exhausted. She has worked like a horse all day to get ready for the party and to make sure that all her guests are getting exactly what they want, when they want it.

We would personally prefer a hostess to put less emphasis on exotic canapés, the involved entrées, and the devastating desserts if it would mean that she would have more time to devote to her traditional role—that of hostess. It is delightful, of course, to have delicious foods, beautifully served, but if it means sacrificing the hostess for this cause, is it really worth it?

When we sally forth to a friend's house for dinner we look forward to talking to them and their friends, to good conversation, to new ideas, to the give and take that can occur at a party around the dinner table. This could only happen if you have a hostess, and by that we mean a hostess who is running the show.

If good party conversation is becoming a lost art and sometimes it is, it is probably not so much that we are more dull and less witty than our parents and grandparents. Perhaps we miss the key ingredient, the hostess that provides the spark and direction for the party and the stimulation of her guests.

BEHIND THE SCENES

The time of the year has come for turning to the outdoors and to casual, easy-going living. This issue of American Home concentrates on this subject... but by no means is it limited to this theme. Take a look at three of our contributors. One is a landscape architect, one an architecture critic, and the third a free-lance writer who concentrates on medical features. Each has helped make this month's issue one we feel you'll enjoy reading indoors or out—summer or winter.

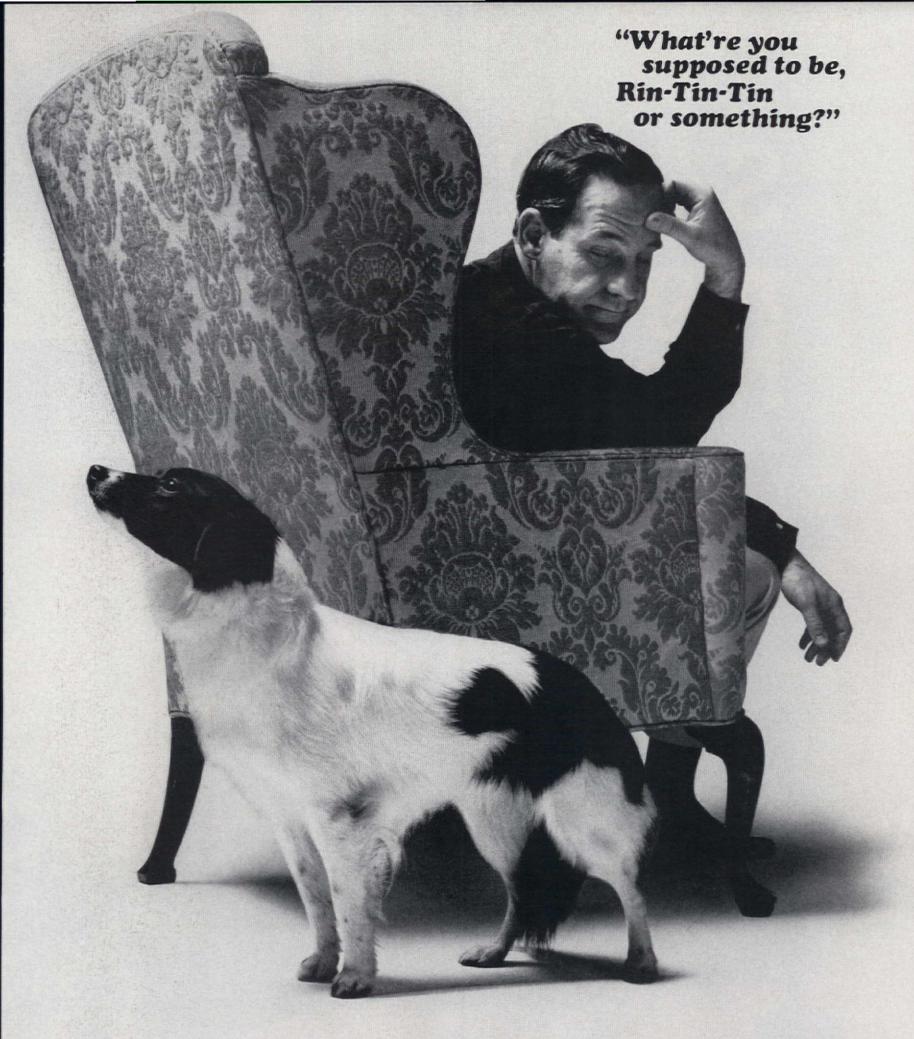

William Kapranos is a landscape architect and planning consultant. A member of the American Society of Landscape Architects, he has been in continuous practice (with the exception of the Korean War) in Marin County, California, since 1946. His work has involved all fields of landscape design, including residential, commercial, institutional, parks, and subdivisions. A garden which he designed appears on page 73.

Wolf Von Eckardt is the architecture critic of the Washington Post and writes the weekly column "Cityscape." He recently won the 1967 National Headliners Club award for the best special feature column. The author of the forthcoming Shouting in Isolation-Architecture and the Urban Crisis, Von Eckardt is well known for his concern for America's urban planning. Previous books include The Challenge of Megalopolis (Macmillan, 1964) and Life for Dead Spaces (with Charles M. Goodman) (Harcourt, Brace, & World, 1963). In this issue we present the first of his series of articles entitled "Toward a Better Community." His story begins on page 40.

Annette Francis Benjamin, author of our "Health in the Home" column, first became interested in medicine when she met her husband, internist Dr. Bry Benjamin. Through the years she has attended medical conferences with him and assisted at his office. The Benjamins are now working on their second book, enjoying life with their three-year-old son, and actively pursuing a wide range of other interests. Annette is also an accomplished pianist.

You can't put a dog on Gravy Train and expect him to behave like the same old la-di-da dog. Gravy Train is no la-di-da dog food.

Gravy Train makes a dog feel like Rin-Tin-Tin.

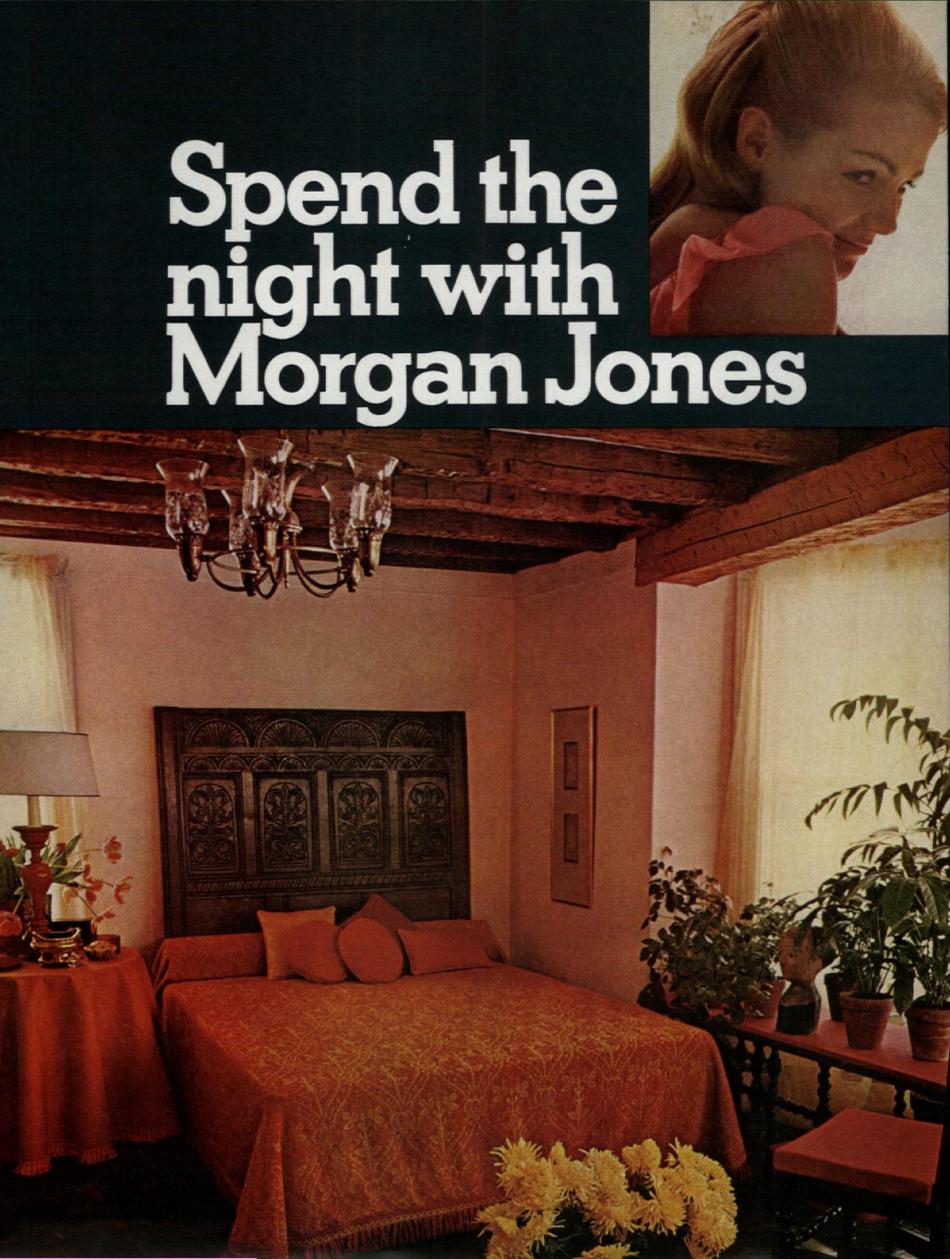

It's all in the way we at Gaines make Gravy Train. It isn't just stuff to fill him. Gravy Train is great hunks of good food he can bite into. And because we feel that dogs, like anyone else, like to enjoy what they're eating, we make Gravy Train so it makes its own beefy gravy when you add water.

Or don't add water and you've got a good, dry dog food.

Wet or dry, Gravy Train is a complete basic meal you can serve your dog every day. And when your dog starts feeling like Rin-Tin-Tin, imagine how great you're going to feel.

THE FAMILY PET By PATRICIA O'KEEFE

HOW TO TEACH YOUR DOG TRICKS

Do dogs ever dream of running away to join the circus? I think they might, if they could belong to Dwight Moore's romping, tumbling, tail-wagging Mongrel Revue, a featured act in the famous Shrine Circus. The revue is a hilarious scramble of dogs who can dance, leap, climb ladders, and skip rope. Each one looks as if he is enjoying the fun as much as the audience.

Since this is the season for backyard circuses, and every circus needs a "Rover, the Wonder Dog," I asked Dwight Moore for some professional tips on teaching tricks to a dog.

Right off, he admitted his method is all wrong according to the usual show-business standards. Most trainers believe a good performing dog cannot be a pet as well. Moore makes pets of all his dogs.

He believes dogs will learn to do tricks mainly to please their masters. A little reward—a bit of food—keeps them interested in the lesson, but for many dogs, he says, a pat on the head and affectionate praise is all that is needed.

He suggests that when you begin to teach your dog a trick, take him to a place where you can work in privacy and where he'll have firm footing.

Use the same words and gestures or hand signals each time you tell your dog what to do. He learns by repetition. Be patient. Be sure he understands what you want him to do. Reward each good try so that he has confidence in himself and you. Short lessons are better than long ones—about five minutes.

Don't try to teach a puppy tricks, and don't let a young child try to teach a dog. With these tips in mind, here's how to make a "Rover, the Wonder Dog" of your pooch.

SIT LIP

Sit your dog in a corner with his back close to the wall. Gently lift his forelegs and help him balance on his haunches. Keep repeating "sit" or "up" and talk to him in a reassuring tone. Hold him up just a few seconds. As he gets the idea of balancing, take your hands away and keep him in position by repeating "sit...sit."

JUMPING

Jumping is very good exercise for an active, long-legged dog. Build a low hurdle with a broom handle and stacks of rocks or boards. Put a training collar and leash on your dog. Run with him toward the hurdle and jump with him a few times, then step aside and send him over by himself. By repeating words and actions, he'll learn what the hurdle is for and be ready to hop over without the leash. After he gains confidence, you can make the hurdle higher. Two-and-a-half times a dog's shoulder height is a safe jumping height.

Let every lesson be fun for your dog and you. Keep smiling and talking and praising him when he tries—even when he's a bit clumsy. If he works with his nose in the air and his tail wagging, he's enjoying himself. If he seems to be reluctant to do a particular trick, try something else.

FETCHING

Most dogs like the game of fetching a toy or stick. Start by waving the object. When he's watching eagerly, toss it a few feet away and say "fetch." As he picks it up, call him to come to you. Many dogs get the idea right away. If your dog wants to run away instead of bringing the toy to you, work with him on a long leash and tell him to come as you pull him toward you. Never yank an object from a dog's mouth. You may injure his teeth or jaws.

HOLD IT

You can train your dog to hold a newspaper, a toy bone, or a small basket in his mouth. Choose an object he can hold comfortably. Tell him to sit and place the object between his jaws. Put your hand under his chin and tell him to "hold it." When he starts to drop the object, apply a little easy pressure under his chin and repeat the command.

And now, you're ready to ask folks to step right up and see the amazing, most wonderful dog in the world...yours!

MONEY MANAGEMENT

BORROWING MONEY FOR NEW HOME FURNISHINGS

If it seems a real must to replace certain home furnishings right now, and you aren't in a position to pay cash, how many ways can you borrow the price?

You have a choice and here are some of them:

- · Revolving credit at the store.
- · Installment plan.
- · Line of credit at the bank.
- · Personal loan at the bank.
- · Borrowing on your savings.
- · Credit union.
- Borrowing on life insurance.
- Simple interest loan with stocks and bonds as collateral,
- · Finance company personal loan.

The cost of borrowing the sum you need and the time allowed for repayment vary depending on which one of these methods you use.

The first question is what determines the cost of borrowing. The basic factors are:

Whom you borrow from and the amount you borrow.

The length of time involved.
The risk the creditor takes.
The collateral or security you offer.

FIGURING INTEREST RATES

While interest rates are clearly stated by each lender, what do they add up to for you? You can see what they say—but what do they mean? It's almost like learning another language, figuring out how to compare one interest rate with another.

It makes considerable difference whether the money is being lent at add-on or discount interest, a monthly interest rate, or at simple interest.

Credit unions, small-loan companies, and stores often quote interest rates at from 1 percent to 3½ percent per month. Now this may sound pretty nice indeed. But remember, this is only for one month. In order to figure the true interest rate you'd be paying for 12 months, you must multiply by 12. So interest at 1½ percent a month would be 18 percent per year. Interest of 3 percent a month equals 36 percent per year.

If the difference between one source of borrowing and another is, say, $9 a month, don't fall into the trap of saying, "Oh, well, the monthly payment at A's is only $9 more than that at B's." What you want to tally up is the cost for the year—or 12 times that $9 a month which means you'd actually be paying $108 more to A than you would to lender B.

WAYS TO BORROW

Let's say you want to buy $800 worth of merchandise, Examine the various ways of borrowing.

Revolving credit: This is a logical starting point for the family's thinking if they've had a regular charge account with the store.

With this type of credit—or borrowing—you can be charged 1½ percent on the unpaid balance each month for the entire repayment period.

If you decide to pay for the total cost of the furnishings in a year's time under this plan, you'll pay $73.36 a month for twelve months. The dollar cost of this credit is $80.03. So you have paid back a total of $880.03 on $800 worth of merchandise.

Installment plan: You usually make a down payment when you sign the contract. Arrangements are made for the amount of each payment and length of time involved. Finance and other special charges are added. The true interest rates are usually from 15 to 20 percent.

Line of credit: This means you have a credit reserve with your bank to cover an $800 check if you want to buy for cash. Many banks today will set up a reserve in your checking account for from $400 to $5000. If you use this reserve, it will cost you 1 percent per month interest on your unpaid balance. True interest, 12 percent a year. Assuming a year's repayment period, you'd pay $71 a month or an interest charge of $51.99.

Personal loan at the bank: If you actually want $800 for these furnishings, you can get an add-on loan. Or if you'll settle for a few dollars less than that exact amount, a discount loan. Some commercial banks offer one type, some the other.

To take one example: If it's a 6 percent add-on, you will receive $800 in cash. You repay $848.40 divided into 12 equal monthly payments of $70.70 each. In other words, the interest is figured on the total amount and added on at the time you take the loan, and this total is divided into monthly payments. So you will pay $48.40 for the accommodation of using somebody else's money. True interest rate is 11.07 percent.

If it's a 6 percent discount loan, and you ask for $800, you may actually receive $752. This is because the interest is taken out of the $800 at the time you make the loan. Your monthly payments for one year will thus be $66.67. True interest rate, 11.78 percent. You will have paid $48.

Borrowing on your savings: Of course, it's cheaper to borrow your own money, while your savings are continuing to earn money for you. If, for instance, you have $1000 in your savings account, or shares in a savings and loan association, and borrow $800 on your passbook, the $1000 continues to draw interest.

You pay a low interest rate on an add-on loan at a bank or on a simple interest basis at either the bank or a savings and loan association.

Credit union: If you are a member of a credit union, you might consider borrowing there. Interest rates are limited by law to a maximum of 1 percent per month on the unpaid balance . . . which is a 12 percent true interest rate per year. So if you want an $800 loan on this basis it will cost you $51.99. Your monthly payments would be $71 throughout the year.

Borrowing on life insurance with a loan value: This is an unwise method of borrowing unless in case of real need—even though the loan may be available at 5 percent simple interest, some at 6 percent. While this may look attractive, your insurance is for protection, and should be left intact.

Simple interest loan using collateral such as stocks and bonds: Banking institutions will lend money on stocks and bonds in amounts representing from 60 to 70 percent of the market value of the securities (higher percentage in the case of government bonds). The charge on the loan is usually discounted in advance. An $800 loan at a simple interest rate of 6 percent would cost you $48. You would receive $752. But you'd pay back at the end of the 12 months, $800. Repayment is not by monthly installments on this type of loan.

This is not to be confused with a personal loan, even though it might appear to cost the same. Here you've had the use of the $800 for the entire year, while with a personal loan you've had the use of the $800 for just one month. After that, you had to start paying it back—with use of less of the $800 each month.

Personal loan at a finance company: The amount of money which can be borrowed from a small loan company is limited by state laws, which vary widely.

The cost of the loan includes all expenses connected with it—interest rate, insurance, etc. And the maximum charge varies with different states. Usually, it's graduated with the size of the loan and ranges from 2 to 3½ percent per month on the unpaid balance. The true interest rate would be from 24 to 42 percent per year.

If you borrow $800 at 3 percent per month on the unpaid balance, the cost would be $132. Monthly payments for the year would be $77.60.

DOING YOUR HOMEWORK

With a few simple rules, you can determine what you'd actually pay on a loan that states interest rates from 1 to 3½ percent on the unpaid balance. The following is admittedly a basic, old-fashioned method, but if you don't have a computer around, it can serve you in good stead.

Use these five steps as a means of finding the answer—using a base of $100 at 1 percent interest to be paid in 12 monthly payments:

- 1. Divide $100 by 12. This gives the amount you pay on the principal each month, which is $8.33.
- 2. Figure the interest on $100 at 1 percent. This is $1. The first month you'll pay $8.33 plus interest, which is a total of $9.33.
- 3. Each month subtract $8.33 from the principal left at the end of the month. Example: $100 $8.33 = $91.67.
- 4. Figure the interest on $91.67 at 1 percent. This is 92c, The second month you will pay $8.33 plus the 92c interest, which is a total of $9.25. Payment is figured this way every month. 5. Total all the interest charges for the year and add this sum to the principal of the loan. If you divide this grand total by 12, you'll arrive at the equal monthly payments.

While nobody denies that there is a need for truth-in-lending clarification of some kind, there is a division of opinion as to how the costs of borrowing can be clarified. The consumer must now depend on prevailing state laws. But it is a cheering fact that these laws are being improved, to your advantage.

BOOKS OF HOME INTEREST

The Complete Book of American Country Antiques. Country antiques are items that were in everyday use in early America—such as tinware, woodenware, wrought and cast iron, copper and brass, pottery, and fabrics. These antiques are becoming more sought after now that traditional antiques are quite scarce and expensive. Country antiques were originally handmade, later factory made. Author Katherine McClinton's discussion of them is quite fascinating; she describes the original uses of the objects and their availability today. Excellent photographs. $5.95. (Coward McCann) Stitches in Time. There's a great deal of information packed into this attractive little book. In addition to an interesting, illustrated history of embroidery and discussion of modern-day stitchery, there's a good section on embroidery instruction for the beginner. By Hilda Kassell. $3.95. (Meredith)

Attracting Birds: From the Prairies to the Atlantic. We hear that bird watching, one of the oldest of hobbies, is becoming even more popular. Wouldn't it be delightful to be able to attract whatever birds you choose to your yard? Well, that's exactly what this new guide book for bird lovers tells you how to do. Author Verne Davison helps plan a program of feeding and housing that will attract the species of your choice. There are good sketches of birdhouses and feeders and a new, complete list of the food preferences of birds. More than 400 species for all areas of the country are covered. This is not a book for the casual once-in-a-while bird watcher. It doesn't describe birds for purposes of identification, and parts of it are quite technical, but it's a valuable guide for those seriously interested. $6.95. (Thomas Crowell)

MAINLY FOR MEN

Unless Dad has been hinting for the past month or two that he'd like a new shotgun, fishing rod, or what have you, it's hard to pick a really good Father's Day present. Of course, he'll probably accept the proverbial tie in good grace. But he'd be much happier with:

A Saber Saw: It's a really fun-type power tool that cuts intricate patterns in wood, metal, rubber, plastics, and other materials. Ideal for making toys, wall plaques, and the like, it can also do serious work like cutting a half-inch steel bar. This model, from Stanley, has two speeds, which the operator matches to material being cut. It's called the Job/Master and sells for $40.

A Pocket-Size Camera: It uses both drop-in cartridges for easy loading and plug-in flash cubes that permit four quick shots without changing flashbulbs.

Kodak Instamatic S-10 costs about $30. For easy carrying, the lens retracts, pops out again at touch of a button.

A Tiny Telescope: Only 15/8 inches long by 3/4 inch in diameter, the Emoskop is probably the most unobtrusive telescope in the world. (It gives 2.5 power.) But that's only the beginning. Switch the optics around in various ways and it becomes a magnifier of 5, 10, or 15 power or a microscope of about 25 power. Made by Seibert, in Germany, and imported by Haverhill's. Price is $15.

An Electric Hedge Trimmer: He'll find it a godsend on weekends when a shaggy hedge confronts him on his way to the golf course. The Black & Decker model shown here is available with 16-inch double-edge blade, for $33. Another, with 13-inch single-edge blade, sells for $20.

"All our rooms are this cozy...and clean... now that we have flameless electric heat."

That's one of the delights of flameless electric heat. It's gentle and even in every room. Cozy for living. Cozy for sleeping.

And clean? Modern electric heat is as clean as electric light. After all, it's flameless. So your whole home stays clean longer...even your walls. And electric heat is quiet. So quiet.

SONNETS FROM A PORCH-OPHILE

The most important room in our house, from May to October, is the porch. I can't imagine living in a house without a porch in the summer, any more than I can imagine living in a house without a fireplace in the winter. Porches are like husbandshundreds of people get along without them, but once you have one you can't imagine doing without.

I love porches in the springtime, I love porches in the fall. I love porches in the summer when it sizzles and, yes, I even love them in the winter when it drizzles (where do people without porches cut jack-o'-lanterns, fix Christmas greens, and leave the pile for the laundryman?).

I love porches for Sundaymorning pancakes drenched in syrup and sunshine. I love porches for curling up with the morning mail and a second cup of coffee. I love porches for sneaky afternoon siestas and tinkly iced-tea klatsches and happy-go-lucky-suppers.

In short, the porch is where we live-morning, noon, and night--rain or shine. It's where we read the paper, shuck the corn, do the crossword, watch the ballgame, mend the socks, chew the fat, pass the pickles.

Where do people without porches watch a thunderstorm from? A porch is the only place to be during a crashing, crackling, ripsnorting cloudburst. Where do people without porches gather at the end of the day? A porch is the only place to be when the sun slips slowly into the trees and the fireflies come out to play. Most of all, where do people without porches linger on summer's soft, sweet, velvety nights? Of course, you can always go to bed. Or put a chair out on the lawn and wallow in the moonglow, cricket song, and perfumed night air. But it's one thing to wallow in nature and another to have it crawling all over you.

You'll gather that when I say porch, I mean screened porch. That's because I grew up in a house with a screened porch and our last house had a screened porch and we have one now. I've been screenwashed-but I'd be delighted to sit on any other kind of porch you have, just ask me. I love all kinds. I love great, big, oldfashioned porches that ramble around all three sides of the house and hold everything from gliders and hammocks to bicycles and baby carriages. I love little postage-stamp porches on the fronts of houses where old folks sit and rock and watch Elm Street go by. I love breezeswept porches overlooking the sea and shadowy porches under old apple trees and lush-plush porches dripping with pots of geraniums and baskets of fuchsia. I love verandas, loggias, piazzas, porticos, colonnades, balconies, terraces, decks, patios, and anything else you could possibly call a porch. If I were building a house, I'd probably order one of each-but a screened porch comes first.

Actually, our screened porch wasn't always a screened porch. It used to be a patio. That is, it was to us. It had a floor like a porch and a roof like a porch, but to us it was just "the patio"—a nice place to sit and sun and sip and visit, but you wouldn't want to live there. Then up went the screens and, presto, "the patio" turned into "the porch"-and we turned into full-time porch-sitters.

I keep wondering why just a little screening should make such a whopping difference. It's more than just a question of bugs. Screens make a porch cozy, homey, cocoony. They don't just keep out the bees and mosquitoes—they keep out the world. A screened porch is vour own little island afloat in a sea of green. On a fresh, new morning it's a dew-sparkled butterfly chrysalis to step intoin your nightie, who's to know? On the long, lazy afternoons it's a sunny pool of privacy, a shimmering Shangri-La with no "No Picnicking" signs posted. And on midsummer nights it's a candle-lit never-never land where time disappears.

But what's the use of counting the ways in which I love thee, Porch? People who don't have porches will think I'm dotty writing sonnets. And people who do will write their own.

BEAUTY AT HOME

WHO NEEDS TO BE BORN BEAUTIFUL?

It hardly pays to be born beautiful nowadays. We all admire the naturally lovely creature, but in this day of self-made beauty she does not have the powerful advantage she used to have. Really, her fairy godmother might have done just as well to bestow talent or charm or brains. Good looks are something she can run up herself!

Aren't you glad you were born in the era that has made the plain woman obsolete? In the 1960s an endless stream of cosmetics that work and a world of know-how, free for the reading and the practicing, enable you to create your own looks. You can choose your own hair and skin coloring, whammy up your eyes, reshape your features with contour makeup, choose straight or curly hair. But like all rewarding do-it-yourself projects, the key word is do. Good looks do take some doing, some discipline, and some time.

Time! That's what you have least of. Yet when a household crisis hits you-when the baby has a fever and the washing machine quits-you make time, because you have a strong motive. Finding time for good looks equally needs a motive. But what more drive do you need than looking in the mirror and knowing that there stands a potentially good-looking woman, if you will just unveil her?

FEASIBLE BEAUTY ROUTINES

Since you are so busy, though, it's more realistic to pick beauty routines that you can make abiding habits than to indulge in sporadic beauty sprees so over-ambitious and tricky that you can never keep them up. It is better to take advantage of those techniques that are genuinely quick and easy, and which pay off out of all proportion to the effort involved. Adopting the moisturizer habit, for example, is your skin's best protection against outdoor weather and indoor heat, and takes no time at all. Just apply sparingly under your makeup, and again after you've cleansed your face at night. Dorothy Gray's Secret of the Sea is a good choice.

EYE MAKEUP

White makeup around the eyes is as close to instant glamour as you can get, and it's great for the busy, because, unlike colored shadow, you can hardly goof with it. Helena Rubinstein's new Whitelight Eyeshine is a little stick you stroke over your lower lids up to the fold and then pass lightly beneath the arch of your eyebrows. It lights up your eyes and flatters your skin so subtly that people wonder what makes you look so marvelous, without quite seeing what it is you did. And it takes only seconds.

Eyebrows are something else again. Nothing can more alter your expression—and nothing can go more wrong. Begin by tossing out all your preconceptions about eyebrows. You don't use a black pencil, you don't try for one unbroken line, you don't drastically lengthen or arch. To begin with, your brows are shorter than you think. Just for fun, snip a piece of string to the length of your brow. Seeing how relatively short it is gives you a clearer grasp of what

Now then, what you need for your brows is a dry cake powder with a little tapered brush, perhaps Revlon's Brow Beautiful in brown, gray, or auburn. Look straight ahead in the mirror and place a tiny dot directly above the outer edge of your iris. This is where you will arch your brow. Dip your brush in the dry color, place it on the dot, and lightly make short feathery strokes backward to the inner end of your brow. Gradually, soft natural color emerges-softness is the point. Then lift your brush, place it on the dot, and lightly sketch in the short tail of the brow. Strive for a natural peak, and stick as closely as possible to your brow bone. Now smooth brows into place, and that's how you look in beautiful brows.

Nobody claims that expert makeup is as easy as rolling off a log. But you can gradually perfect one technique after another, just as you can continually add to your repertoire of smash recipes. The rewards are so great, would you settle for less? Not in this good-looking age!

It's elementary.

What starts perspiration odor is bacteria. What stops bacteria is Dial. It's the one deodorant soap with AT-7. That's why a Dial shower has staying power. Plain and simple.

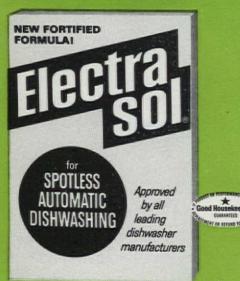

If you want to get more cleaning power out of your dishwasher, put more cleaning power into it.

New fortified Electrasol now has extra power...20% more active cleaning ingredients than any other leading brand.

That's what it takes for brighter, more sparkling dishes.

HEALTH IN THE HOME By ANNETTE FRANCIS BENJAMIN

WARM WEATHER HAZARDS: INSECT STINGS

Summer's pleasant outdoor activities are sometimes interrupted by unpleasant intruders—stinging insects. According to the Insect Committee of the American Academy of Allergy, the most frequent stinging insect is the honeybee; other common offenders are yellow jackets, wasps, hornets.

While people have always dreaded the pain of a sting, recent attention has been focused on the fact that a single sting or multiple stings can cause fatalities—usually in people who had previously experienced a severe allergic reaction to the same kind of insect sting. Since a safe and effective repellent has not yet been developed, everyone should learn to recognize stinging insects, avoid them whenever possible, and know what to do if someone gets stung.

HOW TO TREAT A STING

The most popular misconception regarding the treatment of insect stings is that the application of a mud pack is beneficial. This is not only untrue but potentially dangerous—as mud placed over an open wound made by a stinger can introduce an infection into the body if there are bacteria present in the mud.

The first thing to do in treating an insect sting is to apply an ice pack or cold cloths to the affected area; this helps to relieve the pain and reduce swelling. Remove the stinger by gently scraping it out with the tip of a sharp knife. If you do not have one at hand, use your fingernail. Do not use tweezers or your fingers to grasp the stinger, as you may squeeze more venom into the sting.

Once the stinger has been removed, mix two teaspoons of household ammonia or two teaspoons of baking soda in a glass of water, and pour the solution on a piece of sterile or clean cotton. Use this as a moist dressing for up to half an hour.

If the stung area does not feel much improved by the following day, or if the sting becomes painful again after it was feeling better, call your doctor for further advice. Do not scratch any sting, for scratching may cause infection.

TREATING A PERSON WITH AN ALLERGY TO AN INSECT STING

If there is a third person on the scene, have him call a doctor immediately. In the meantime, make the person lie down at once, preferably with his head below the level of his heart and his legs elevated. Apply an ice pack or cold cloths to the stung area and remove the stinger, using the technique described previously.

Anyone who knows he is allergic to the venom of a specific insect should consult a physician, as preventive medical treatment—sometimes called hyposensitization—is available to help such a person become more resistant to the effects of the insect sting. There are also several types of emergency kits on the market designed specifically to treat severe allergic reactions to insect stings.

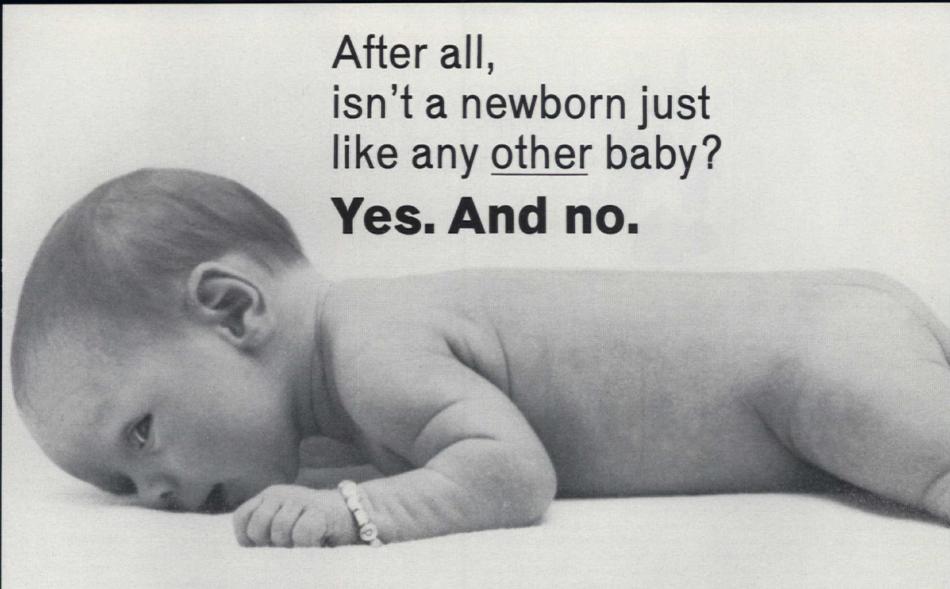

HOW TO AVOID BEING STUNG

Being aware of what is attractive to stinging insects can guide you in your efforts to avoid them whenever possible. Blossoming clover, for example, is irresistible to bees and wasps alike. So whether or not you are allergic to their stings, it is unwise to run barefoot in fields during the summer-and especially during July. Apple orchards are particularly inviting to a nesting queen bee, as her colony can eventually feast on the fallen fruit. Yellow jackets find garbage cans interesting and swarm about on picnic grounds, waiting for their chance at the picnic basket.

Insects are attracted to gaily colored or dark, rough materials, so anyone with a known allergy should wear white clothing, shoes, and some kind of head covering.

If a wasp should get into your car, stop as soon as possible, open all the windows, and remain still until the insect has made its escape.

TOWARD A BETTER COMMUNITY MUST GAS STATIONS BE GARISH?

When you drive up to a gas station, do you wish you were as lucky as the horse pulling an old-time delivery wagon which at least had the benefit of blinders? If so, read on.

We now have a federal law which requires that junkyards along our highways must be screened. But we are only beginning to think about the appearance of gas stations, which contribute far more to what is now widely conceded to be "the mess that is man-made America."

There is, in a pathetically ugly sort of way, at least something organic and, if you will, romantic about those rusting heaps of automobile cadavers that so upset Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson. They serve as a reminder that even these arrogant products of technological mass production are somehow subject to the cycle of life and death. But by all means, let's hide them.

There is, however, nothing organic or romantic about gas stations. They are willful impositions, laboriously contrived happenings, that remind us only of the fact that our designers have so far been unable to bring the blessings of the machine age into harmony with our living environment. Watering troughs for horses were things of beauty that enhanced man's place to live. Filling stations for cars appear lovely at best to their proprietors. This may be one reason why most of them feel compelled to uglify them even more with signs, messy banners, and pennants. Even our pop artists have shunned their overwhelming vulgarity as a motif for their paintings, focusing instead on more innocuous manifestations of popular culture, such as soup cans.

The failure of gasoline dispensers to come up with gas stations that are, as the planners put it; "compatible" with their surroundings presents not only an aesthetic problem. It is also a nuisance for vendors and consumers and sparks urban disorder with its resultant human tensions.

To sustain our a comobility, we need gas and other services that cars won't run without. Yet we don't want service stations where they should be—near where we live or work. Some communities won't even allow them where people shop. The American Petroleum Institute complains that a storm of zoning restrictions against gas stations is blowing across the country. (Baltimore County, for instance, has imposed a six-month moratorium on the construction of any new ones.) But since more stations must be built for an automobile population that grows even faster than the human one, that storm is sweeping most of the stations where they least belong

That is either in the underdeveloped sections of town, where they impede attractive development, or in the already seamy sections, where they add further to the blight. Mostly, however, they are swept out of town where they seed the sprawling fungus growth of seemingly endless traffic-jammedstrip developments that enmesh cities and ruin suburbs.

The obvious answer is to make gas stations acceptable in the right places. The oil companies, suddenly anxious to be loved, have lately and belatedly begun to give some thought to Shell, have gone further and actually started to design new stations or, rather, station buildings, But this alone is rarely an improvement.

The problem is not so much the little house—though the usual white enameled steel boxes where the attendants add up your bill, sell you accessories, and grease your car, could surely be more attractive. The root of the ugliness is the necessarily fairly large, paved, oil stained, and disorganized open space in front of that box which is cluttered with pumps, advertising gimmicks, and other paraphernalia.

It therefore doesn't help very much when the companies try to make the building more obviously ingratiating. Glib folksiness may work in advertising; it doesn't work in architecture. It seems, in fact, ludicrously poor taste when a filling station masquerades in pump area rather than the service building, which he keeps pleasantly quiet and unassuming. It serves only as a backdrop for what amounts to a sort of marketplace, clearly defined by a border of shrubbery and marked by large and utterly simple canopies. They consist of nothing but a pole supporting a flat umbrella 30 feet in diameter. It gives us shelter from sun and rain and lights the pumps at night. Echoing the round canopies are round pumps, round tire sales units, a round oil service carrousel and, for large stations that dispense a lot of "gallonage," as the trade calls it, a round pavilion that houses a small office near the pumps. Repetition of the circular theme, Noyes feels, gives these usually unrelated shapes a sense of unity.

That, at least, is the conclusion

Eliot Noves, an architect and one of the country's leading industrial designers, came to when he searched for a new design concept for Mobil stations. His solution emphasizes the to be.

And, as he did in his work for IBM and Westinghouse, Noyes carries this sense of unity all the way to everything you will see of Mobil, from architecture to sales slips. The company thus asserts itself with strong, refreshingly simple and functional dignity which, reinforced by the simplified new trademark (the work of graphic designers Chermayeff and Geismar) will undoubtedly get more attention than gaudiness does.

Two of Noyes's new service stations are already in business at New Haven and West Hartford, Connecticut, And if the motorists there like his designs as well as I do, there is hope that his concept starts a trend that may in time unclutter our roads.

But that still doesn't solve the problem either within the city or within suburban settlements. It has been our mistake all along, I feel, that because we drive our cars into the city, we assume that the city must adjust to the car and tolerate buildings and building design that were especially created for it. We are thus tearing the city apart with monstrous freeways, low-slung and space-consuming motels, suburban shopping centers perched (continued on page 93) better service-station design. But with the exception of Eliot Noyes's new concept for Mobil, their thinking, as far as I can discern, is still woefully superficial and cosmetic.

I have nothing against cosmetics, to be sure, and was delighted to learn that 26 oil-company executives recently assured Mrs. Johnson that they intend to "beautify" their stations. They are asking their dealers to tidy up and plant some shrubs and flowers about. But even that is not simple. Some dealers complain that their investment in beauty has yielded them little more than an appreciative letter or two from some old lady in the neighborhood and a lot of litter caught in the new shrubbery.

Some companies, notably Esso and pseudo-Colonial wrapping, selling us brake fluid and windshield wipers from a "cutee, oldee" miniature brick mansion with streamlined Palladian doorways, mullions, transoms and all. Are Esso gas jockeys going to wear wigs to put that tiger in our tank?

Nor does the ranch-style gas-station house solve the problem. A place to service a modern automobile is no more a ranch house than it is an 18th-century manor or the Taj Mahal. It is a service station and any attempt to conceal this perfectly happy fact is patently phony. There are also some new "contemporary" station buildings around, which oil companies seem rather proud of. But these, too, are more often than not contrived architectural stunts rather than the

DAYLILIES FLAMBOYANT AND SHY

Daylilies are magic flowers. Every day from June solstice to September equinox, they open new blooms that bewitch and delight the eye. Summer would be a dull season were it not for the graceful nodding shapes of daylilies dancing over rich green foliage.

Daylilies were once common orange things with brown or black speckles. They escaped from cultivation and tossed their bright heads wild and unattended along fences, in meadows, along abandoned foundations. They had to be tough to survive; and prevail they did, through flood, drought, and blazing heat. Now hybridizers have bred them to refinement. They come in shades from pale yellow and ivory through pinks and reds to maroon and ebony-purple. There is also a fine range of polychromes combining cinnamon and bright pink, tangerine, and brown. Their shapes have changed too, and you can have wide, (continued on page 96)

WHAT DOES IT MEAN

UPHOLSTERED FURNITURE TERMS

You know exactly what you want—but how do you describe it to your furniture salesman? If you're lucky the sofa of your dreams will be right there in the furniture department or in a catalog. If it isn't, you may have a difficult time. To communicate and to understand what's available, a working knowledge of furniture language is a must. The following glossary of common furniture terms will add useful words to your furniture vocabulary.

The latest thing is called total upholstery; it refers to pieces that are often very large and are upholstered all over, including the arms, legs, and feet. Even open-arm chairs are now being covered head to toe in upholstery fabric without an inch of wood showing. A fully upholstered piece, on the other hand, has exposed casters, bare legs, a metal or wood base, or it can hide these under a fabric skirt. Exposed wood refers to the wood frame left showing as a decorative addition to the design on a partially upholstered piece. It can have natural or painted finishes.

Total upholstery

A loose back and seat means that separate cushions are set in the seat and against the backthese are individual pillows and are upholstered on all sides. Tight back and seat refers to sofas or chairs with plain backs and seats without separate cushions. A luxurious effect is achieved with tufted or buttoned upholstery. Tufting is tying down sections of fabric with buttons, leaving a puffy area in between. Each area of fabric is folded, tacked down, and stuffed individually, allowing fullness and flexibility. Buttoning is a less expensive version of tufting. The button is placed on a plain upholstered surface and tacked to the inner upholstery, causing a tufted look, but without the extra fullness of good tufting. Pull-up or side chairs often have slip seatsthe seat is separate and can be lifted out of the frame of the chair when it needs upholstering.

The difference between a couch and a sofa today is not clearly defined. A couch (from the French coucher—to lie down) refers to a piece that has only one arm and possibly a back, and that is intended more as a daybed, to be reclined on rather than sat on. A sofa is a more luxuriously upholstered piece, with two arms and a back.

Sofa styles are dependent on details such as the type of arm or back or the overall shape. Often these characteristics are used interchangeably and are found in several styles. The Lawson sofa is fully upholstered with a low, square back and outward turning, rolled arms which are lower than the back. These arms are the most obvious characteristic of this sofa.

Chesterfield is an old English sofa that is staging a comeback today. The arms on the Chesterfield sofa are the same height as the back and are heavily overstuffed like the back. Recently leatherand vinyl-tufted Chesterfields have been used extensively in modern living rooms. A sofa with straight arms and back of the same height is called a Tuxedo sofa. These sofas range from 6 feet 3 inches to 9 feet long. The camelback sofa is usually shown in Colonial style and has a soft camellike hump in the center of the back. It is usually shorter than standard sofas, measuring from 50 inches to 85 inches.

The terms love seat and settee are often used interchangeably, although the pieces they refer to are actually quite different. A love seat is a fully upholstered, scaled-down version of any popular sofa style, seldom exceeding 54 inches in length—enough room for two people. The settee is a wooden-backed piece with little upholstery, usually with a tight seat or a separate cushion tied on. A settle is an all-wood settee, a simple country piece.

A French word that has survived, although its meaning has changed, is banquette, an upholstered bench or settee. Today fully upholstered banquettes are made to be built in along a wall.

Among chairs the most misunderstood term is a French one: Bérgère, pronounced "bare-zhair."

Say bérgère, not bérgère-chair. The bérgère has an upholstered back and sides, a loose-cushion seat, and often a loose-cushion back. Its exposed wood frame is often carved fruitwood in a natural or painted finish. The lounge or club chair is a large, fully upholstered chair frequently available in the same styles as sofas and often sold with a matching sofa as a suite. A club chair can be totally upholstered to the floor or have a skirt of feet showing. Usually it has a loose seat and often a loose back. There are many variations of these chairs, but the best designs are the simplest and most classic.

Slipper chair

Other chairs are more familiar: the wing chair with its winglike projections to ward off drafts; the barrel chair; and the tub chair, round like the barrel chair but lower, often on a swivel and close to the floor. The pull-up chair is a light chair that can be easily moved about a room. A slipper chair is a low upholstered chair without arms, originally used while putting on slippers. Since it is low and small it is now used in living rooms as well as bedrooms.

DECORATING CLINIC

We welcome your questions on decorating and will answer them here, as space permits. Question: I'm puzzled about what to do with my windows. I want to cut down on light, and also, the view isn't too good. Am I right in assuming that draperies over plain curtains look a bit old-fashioned?

Answer: Yes you are. But what's wrong with it if it suits you—and if it's a good solution for your particular problem? If you want a newer look, there are printed sheer curtains with matching heavier-weight draperies.

You might also think in terms of casement cloth draperies. They range in weight from a fairly transparent sheer to a heavily textured weave and come in a wonderful range of colors. Casement cloth draperies are never lined.

Another way to handle your window problem would be to use translucent window shades under casement cloth draperies or to have your drapery fabric laminated to window shades.

Question: The hall of our house was recently carpeted with one of those new polypropylene carpets in an olive green. Our living room is done in light beige wool. The light wool seems to shed on the darker hall carpet and I cannot vacuum it properly. What should I do?

Answer: Probably portions of your polypropylene carpet are tip-sheared. The sheared-off fiber ends are slightly rough, which means that all other fibers will stick to them quite tenaciously. The only way to remove them is with a good strong upright vacuum cleaner with a beating action. You can get a special attachment for your vacuum cleaner if it is a tank type.

Question: We have to entertain some of my husband's important clients. I wonder what to do about flowers, since I'm not good at arranging them. What should I tell the florist?

Answer: We're so glad you asked because you've given us a beautiful chance to get on one of our pet soap boxes, the one that's labeled "florists" flower arrangements." Naturally you cannot copy those creations of wired flowers that only the most talented florists produce, but then why would you want to?

Why not, instead, do what comes naturally and beautifully? Start with a simple, handsome vase and fill it with loosely bunched flowers of the season. Nothing to it. Just keep one thing in mind: scale. It should be generous, not stingy, unless you want to do some miniflowers. Small baskets of daisies, tightly packed, are nice for the dinner table. Also, watch the relationship between vase and flowers; flowers should be twothirds larger than the container. Floor vases with flowering branches are newer than houseplants and marvelous for filling an empty corner.

Question: The floors of our house need refinishing—what color should they be stained? Answer: Always as dark as possible, almost black is our preference. However, one word of warning: the darker the stain, the harder the upkeep. We once saw a room by designer John Gerald with a wood floor stained a wonderful shade of turquoise. Why not experiment with a colored stain? Try olive green, blue, or red.

Question: The bathrooms in our new house are dingy. What can we do to dress them up and make them more cheerful without spending a mint of money? Our tiles are colored salmon pink and black.

Answer: Easy—color and pattern will do the trick. You will probably want to wallpaper the wall above the tile. We suggest a paper with a very pale pink background and a pattern in a darker version of the salmon. If you find a paper you like with a background the exact color of your tiles, it should be fairly well covered with a print in light versions of the same pink and with lots of white in it.

Towels in various shades of the pink and a black-and-white shower curtain would be very smart with this. For a novel way of hanging shower curtains see American Home, May, 1967. Question: I've been shopping for window shades recently and am confused about the difference between something they call room-darkening shades and translucent ones. I want shades for privacy and also want them to keep out the sun. Which kind should I get?

Answer: A translucent window shade is all you need if you want to protect your furniture and carpets from sun fading and yourself from intrusion by the outside world. However, if you want to darken a room completely, for instance if you want to keep the morning sun out of your eyes in the bedroom, then get a room-darkening shade. It will block out all light if it is properly fitted at the sides of the window. Room-darkening shades are usually two-faced: white on the outside for uniformity from the street, white or any color of your choice inside.

Question: My sister-in-law told me recently that colored candles are considered to be in bad taste. Is this true? I like colored candles; white ones look dull. Answer: When it comes to a formal dinner table your sisterin-law is quite right; until further notice, candles should be white if you want to be correct. Although we still prefer white, cream, or natural-colored beeswax candles, for less formal occasions we don't object to colored candles. Never use black ones. But bright red candles, which might look hideous in the wrong setting, can be charming at Christmastime with lots of greens and apples for a Scandinavian flavor. Usually, candles in muted so-called off colors like olive green are preferable to baby pink ones. Taste today is much less rigid and what was considered impossible even five years ago is now accepted and even admired.

Question: I'm trying to furnish our first apartment and am just about ready to give up—everything is expensive. Please help.

Answer: You're going to have to make one big decision first: Do you want to invest most of your decorating money in one or two really great pieces and improvise the rest until you can afford another splurge, or do you want to furnish your whole apartment at one fell swoop but with things of mediocre quality?

We suggest that method number one is better all around. Suppose, for example, your heart is set on a beautiful but costly dining room table. Buy it, find inexpensive chairs to go with it (In American Home, Sept., 1966, we showed one that costs $12), and maybe an indoor-outdoor rug, or one of sisal, now available in several colors and patterns, that would be perfectly fine for year-round use, or a painted or stenciled floor with window shades or chairrail border to match.

Biggest investment, according to most newlyweds, is upholstered furniture for the living room, Instead of buying a mediocre sofa and matching upholstered chairs, take advantage of the current craze for wicker, find some old pieces and paint them white or dark brown, make your own seat cushions and pile the sofa with pillows for comfort. Ask yourself whether you really need a sofa-maybe several easy chairs would do just as well. Or investigate the possibilities of making do with great foam slabs until you can buy a sofa you really like.

Wall-to-wall, ceiling-to-floor draperies can wreck almost any budget, but who says they're a must when there are other ways out of the window dilemma? Discover blinds: the narrowest of venetians, bamboo, or tortoise shell patterned, or old-fashioned porch blinds in colors or white. If the length is right, why not use shower curtains that now come in patterns worthy of any living room? Make your own of wet-look vinyl or even paper.

If you're afraid of a vacuum of great unfurnished areas learn to furnish with great big patterns. If all you own is a love seat that's too small for your room, cover it in the biggest print you can find. Staple lengths of a great print to dowels at the top and the bottom to cover a bare wall.

Question: We've just finished decorating our home, the major pieces are all in place, and now we need accessories and something for the wall. Our color scheme is blue and green—should everything we buy match? I think the painting over the sofa must be blue-green.

Answer: Yours is what we've Answer: Yours is what we've called an Instant Impact room (see American Home, March, 1967, issue). To make it come off successfully you will probably have to color coordinate all your accessories. The trouble with this kind of decorating is that next time around you'll want a whole new collection of accessories.

But when it comes to paintings, we feel strongly that they should not be bought to match any particular color schemes. Get a good painting no matter what its colors, and you'll enjoy it now as well as when you change your color scheme.

Question: It seems to me that I've been hearing a lot of talk recently about mixing several patterns in one room. How can I do this and not have a room that looks as though it came from a bargain sale?

Answer: There has been a strong trend to mixed patterns, you're absolutely right. It takes a good eye and a very sure taste because there's really no formula. We do suggest, though, that it's easier if you work with a geometric: a dot, stripe, or check plus two other patterns. There should also be a relationship of style between all the prints in one room. Suppose you start with a rather naively quaint "Granny" floral—obviously it won't go with a large-scale English chintz. But it will look charming with other small-scale calico-type florals, so that you end up with a patchwork effect. For an opart room you might mix several op designs. Color is an important consideration too; be sure that the patterns that you mix have the same color throughout.

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE VACATION TIPS

Half the fun of any vacation is in the planning of it. And certainly, through good planning you can eliminate many of the pitfalls that can plague and spoil what normally should be a happy and enjoyable experience. Professional travelers, safety researchers, and just plain summertime vacationers like yourself have learned many things that can make a trip easier, safer, and more exciting. Perhaps you know a few tricks yourself, but how many of the following are you aware of:

PLANNING THE TRIP

- · You can get dozens of pieces of descriptive literature free from any state chamber of commerce. Write to them at the state capital.
- · Your automobile club and most oil companies will be glad to map a route for you and furnish you with up-to-the-minute information on new Interstates and detours you may encounter. They also can recommend restaurants and lodgings.
- · Make reservations early. Write and get written confirmations. Local travel agencies and local members of a chain motel can usually get you immediate confirmation by teletype. And above all, remember to cancel immediately if your plans change.
- · Call ahead to extend an arrival time if you are going to be late. Most reservations are held until 6 PM, Request a late arrival with your reservation.
- Plan to travel about 300 miles a day. More can be tiring and dangerous.

IS YOUR CAR UP TO THE TRIP?

· With extra weight from passengers and luggage and the heat that high speeds will generate in addition to the normal summer heat, your tires will be put to a severe test. Are they in shape to take it? Have them checked by your garage or tire dealer. Make sure your tires are the right size for the load.

- . This would be a good time to. have your car checked at one of the new electronic clinics being established throughout the country by major oil companies and car dealers. Their check is complete with a written report and costs about $10.
- · One major car manufacturer is testing a mobile clinic that makes house calls. Again, the equipment used is practically foolproof and you can be sure of the results.
- · If you have work done on your car, make sure you have a week or so to have a shakedown cruise before the actual trip. This way you can check on the repairs and make sure everything has been done.
- · If you ever considered joining an automobile club, do it before your trip. Their services are extremely valuable in case of an arrest, accident, or mechanical breakdown.
- · Don't jam luggage into the passenger compartment. Store it on the roof if necessary. Store it under canvas and use new rubber cords with hooks to secure it. The cords are available at any auto accessory store. You can save an hour every day in loading and unloading.
- · Carry clean cloths for cleaning windows between service station stops.
- · Carry moist-paper towelettes for quick hand cleansing.
- · Don't leave luggage on top of the car overnight. It can be stolen or damaged. It is even a good idea to keep your car parked within sight while eating if possible.
- · Lock your car when leaving it. 80 percent of all stolen cars are unlocked and 50 percent of those had keys in the ignition. Have extra keys made for other passengers and carry a set in your wallet.
- · Don't tempt thieves. Cover valuables or lock them up, don't leave them lying on a seat even in a locked car.
- · Cameras should be kept out of the sun, as cool as possible. Heat can affect the film.
- · Are your flashlight batteries fresh? Do you have flares for a breakdown? Do you know how to light a flare?

YOU AND YOUR PASSENGERS

- · Will your insurance be valid if you plan to travel in Canada or Mexico? Check this with your agent. This might be a good time to review your insurance coverage and increase it for the trip.
- · Appoint the passenger up front with the driver as a copilot to help the driver watch for route numbers, turnoffs, and other signs. The copilot can also help keep the peace if children are passengers.

- · Get plenty of rest, Plan on eight hours nightly plus frequent stops during the day. Remember this is a vacation, not a marathon drive.
- · Are your driver's license and car registration valid or will they expire before you return? Incidentally, keep them in your wallet.
- · Are you all physically well? Is anyone ill? Someone with a toothache?
- · Is your driving going to be affected by any medication you are taking? Check with your doctor.
- · Wear comfortable clothing. New permanent-press clothing can be washed nightly at most motel laundries This can save carrying extras.
- · Extra pillows and blankets can help make the trip more comfortable.
- · Carry a wet wash cloth in a plastic bag to wash the children.
- · Don't forget games to keep children occupied. Most bookstores carry books listing hundreds of travel games.
- · Credit cards can save carrying large sums of cash. At the end of the trip you will have an accurate record of your expenses. Besides payment will be due a month after the purchase.
- · Certain gas credit cards that are issued free of charge are honored at various motel chains. These cards can save you an annual membership fee.
- · Carry an extra pair of any prescrip-
- Tell relatives and friends where you plan on traveling. This could be vital in case of an emergency at home.

NEW DRIVING TIPS

- · As you enter a new state or see a new speed limit sign read it aloud. It will help you to remember and keep you alert. It will cause others to remember, too, and they can remind you of the limit.
- · If in doubt about a route or turnoff, pull completely off the road or into an information booth to straighten out your confusion. A stopped or hesitant car on a highspeed road is a dangerous roadblock.
- · When a driver ahead signals a left turn, move over to the right in your lane to allow other drivers following you to see the signal also. This can prevent your getting hit in the rear.
- Any time you get into your car and are preparing to pull out into traffic. keep your foot on the foot brake until you move out. Your rear brake lights will alert drivers approaching.
- · If you need lights on to see or be seen, use your headlights not your parking lights. Besides being illegal to use while moving in many states, they are difficult to see.
- Don't wear sunglasses or look through tinted glass at night.
- · Avoid racing with cars in the lane along side of you at a traffic light. By stopping half a car length behind the stop line or behind another driver's front door, you will eliminate the temptation to race.
- · Have the lenses on your headlights

- and taillights cleaned as well as your windshield. Research shows ordinary road dust can appreciably reduce the effectiveness of these lights.
- · Keep your seat belt snugly tight. It will help you in a sudden stop and will give you extra back support.
- · Lock your doors from the inside while traveling. This will keep out intruders and will keep the doors shut in case of a rollover. In case of an ac- cident your chances are better by staying inside.
- · Check your tire pressure in the morning while the tires are cold. By adding 4 pounds to recommended pressure you can further stabilize your car and add miles to your tires.

MOTEL MANNERS

- · If you pull into a motel late at night or leave early, DO IT QUIETLY.
- · Treat the motel as you would your home. After all, it is for the night.
- · If you use their swimming pool, obey their safety rules. Although you may be on vacation, accidents never take a vacation.

American-Standard has only one standard of quality.

How come the prices are different?

For about $9† more...

than an inexpensive round-front model you get this Elongated Cadet*. What makes it worth $9 more? The answer is in the name...elongated. This means that you get an extra-long bowl-it holds more water, and more of the bowl area is under water. So it stays even cleaner and more sanitary in use. The extra bowl length helps to keep the floor clean, too. And the elongated seat is more comfortable you have the Elongated Compact, complete with the revolutionary new Vent-Away* toilet ventilator - exclusive with American-Standard. At a touch of the handle, it whisks toilet odors down the drain before they can become bathroom odors! You no longer have to open a window or use a spray to air out your bathroom. The built-in siphonic action is quick, quiet, thorough - it doesn't get out of order.

For another $401...

For installed prices in your choice of six American-Standard fashion colors or white, see your American-Standard plumbing contractor (in the Yellow Pages under "Plumbing Fixtures" or "Plumbing Supplies"). Or MAIL THE COUPON TODAY.

more and you get the Elongated Glenwall*, also with the exclusive American-Standard Vent-Away toilet ventilator. And look what it doesn't have! The Elongated Glenwall has no pedestal for you to scrub and clean around, for it is an off-the-floor toilet. You can tidy the floor under the toilet with a swish of a mop-standing up. Idea: Use an accent rug under it, or carpet the floor right up to the wall.

HOW TO GIVE A CHILD A RARE VACATION

When Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gardiner of Cheshire, Connecticut, first decided they would like to have a child from the New Haven slums come to stay with them for a short while, their only thought was that the visit might in some way brighten and broaden the life of an unfortunate youngster.

That was six years ago. Today, little Margaret, now 12 years old, is "a part of the family."

True, Margaret still lives with her own family—her mother and five brothers and sisters—in a vast, crowded city project. But as a result of her visits two or three times a year to Cheshire, she now knows what it is to pick flowers in a garden, to sit down for an unhurried family meal, to find ice cream in a refrigerator, to read a book simply for pleasure, and —best of all—to receive the attention of an adult.

"But I think we have gained even more than Margaret," Ruth Gardiner says. "Because of her, we've become more aware of the problems that afflict so many people in cities, and we have gained new appreciation of our own advantages. And Margaret has given us love.

"Just as soon as our own little boy is old enough, we want to have some boys out from the city too."

The Gardiners are just one of some 17,000 suburban and rural families who this year will savor the pleasure of playing host to children from the city streets.

The Friendly Town Program, as it is most commonly called, was started in Sherman, Pennsylvania, in 1877 when the minister of the local Presbyterian church asked his parishioners if they would take into their homes for part of the summer a few children from Manhattan's Lower East Side. The project was so successful that within a short while it was necessary to set up a special fund to administer it. Now known as the Herald Tribune Fresh Air Fund, this organization not only operates seven summer camps in New York State but also supports the program through which underprivileged New York City children are given summer vacations in private homes in almost 2200 Friendly Towns scattered from Maine to Virginia. This summer the fund hopes to place a record 12,230 children. Several hundred children will also visit Friendly Town homes over Christmas.

In more recent years, other programs similar to the Fresh Air Fund's program have sprung up in the East and Middle West. Most are designed to provide one- to two-week (or longer) vacations in July and August for children from scattered cities including New Haven, Cleveland, Toledo, Chicago, Minneapolis, Des Moines, and Denver. A new program in New York's Westchester County and Long Island provides weekend visits at different times of the year.

Here is the way the programs usually operate. (In the absence of specific information from a program, you should verify the facts about such things as the children's health examinations, whether the program carries liability insurance, etc.)

WHO ARE THE CHILDREN?

The majority are between 5 and 12 years of age, but some range up to 16. A great many are Negroes; a sizable percentage of the whites are Puerto Ricans. Orphans are rare, but about half of the children are fatherless. All are poor and live under miserably crowded conditions. Few have ever been outside the city.

Before they are released to host families, all children are carefully screened by reliable social agencies and are given health examinations. Although real delinquents are eliminated, few if any of the youngsters can be called model children.

"The chances of your getting a 'perfect child' are one in a thousand," a brochure published by one program says. "The chances of your getting an 'impossible child' also are one in a thousand."

Most host families are allowed to specify the age and sex of the children they will take; but specification of race and religion is discouraged, and, in the case of many programs, flatly prohibited. Most families ask for only one child at a time, but it is not uncommon to ask for and be given two and perhaps three, provided they are not siblings.

HOW TO BE A HOST

The first step is to contact the program's headquarters or the chairman for your community. Your acceptance depends on where you live and whether you will provide food, bed, love, and simple hospitality at no cost to your guest or to the sponsor. The program usually pays for the child's transportation, but you must live within a reasonable distance of the city. Your age, income, and whether you have children are not crucial.

One program director said these are the things they want to know about a family: "Do you have a normal family life (that means we want two parents, not one)? Are conditions in your home safe and healthy? Are you going to treat the child as if he's on vacation or are you going to load him with work—maybe more work than you give your own kids? (Yes, this happens sometimes.)

"We are also looking for families who will go beyond simply entertaining a child to becoming actively interested in urban problems and trying to do something about them."

HOW WELL ARE YOU MATCHED?

This year, for the first time, the Chicago City Missionary Society's Friendly Town Program will use a computer to try to place the right child with the right family. Most matching-up efforts are less elaborate. Even so, the results have been amazingly good.

Adjustment can take time, however. I knew one middle-aged, childless couple who had a nine-year-old girl as a summer guest. For the first week they were at wit's end trying to keep up with the hyperactive youngster. Then, gradually, their problems began to iron out, and by the time the child returned to the city at the end of a fortnight, harmony reigned. The child returned to them for several years after that.

WHAT ARE YOUR RESPONSIBILITIES?

Once you pick up a visiting child at a railroad or bus station (or occasionally at a collection point in the child's city), you are on your own. Your principal responsibilities are to keep him safe, cared for, and well loved. Almost all families also work hard to take their guests on short trips and to expose them to broadening experiences. "But the children seem to have more fun just being at home," one longtime host reports.

Serious problems are rare; and when they do occur, must be reported immediately to the program headquarters or local chairman. Homesickness and ultraconservative food preferences are the most common minor problems.

In the case of serious illnesses or accidents, the programs assume responsibility for paying the bills. They also generally carry liability insurance to protect host families as well as themselves against suits.

Many children are invited back to the same home year after year. Such continuing relationships very often lead to happy things for the children. For example, a Boston teenager who made weekend visits to a young couple in nearby Norwell for a number of years became their foster child.

Similarly, a Schenectady couple recently arranged to assume legal guardianship of five small New York City Negro boys when their grandmother, their only living relative, dies. As host to one of the boys—and later a brother—for several summers past, the couple developed an interest in the entire family.

Friends of mine in Connecticut took two Fresh Air Fund boys into their home when they were eight, and kept bringing them back every year under the fund's auspices until they were 16. For five years since then the boys have come out from town for weekends and vacations at the family's own expense. Now the family is helping one of the boys through college.

A Fresh Air Fund host in Pennsylvania summed it up this way: "After Maureen left, I realized that aside from providing her with fresh air, good food, lots of fun and pleasant memories to keep and share with her family, we had also given her a goal to strive for and a plan for her future."

But this isn't all that the Friendly Town Programs accomplish. Host families and neighbors benefit too. Sometimes the benefit is in the form of an incident to be cherished and chuckled over. For example, the excitement of the six-year-old who came upon a half-dozen milk bottles behind his hosts' barn. "I found a cow's nest! A cow's nest," he shouted, as he raced into the house.

Another benefit is the neighborhood change of attitude toward the underprivileged that quite frequently occurs. For example, one family who had a Negro child as a summer visitor tells of a neighboring boy who displayed open animosity toward the newly (continued on page 111)

The people who built your dishwasher * recommend that you use something besides a detergent to prevent water spots. They recommend:

LIQUID JET-DRY.

LIQUID JET-DRY causes glasses, silverware and china to shed water instantly after they are rinsed. No water drops are left on the dishes to dry into unsightly water spots. Dishwasher manufacturers, recognizing JET-DRY as the answer to water spotting, equip many models to inject LIOUID JET-DRY into the rinse water. If your dishwasher is so equipped, don't run out of JET-DRY. Even one dishwashing without JET-DRY can cause spots.

SOLID JET-DRY

SOLID JET-DRY is now available for dishwashers not equipped to dispense LIQUID JET-DRY. It dries dishes just as spot-free and sparkling (and just as automatically) as LIQUID JET-DRY does in dishwashers equipped with automatic dispensers. SOLID JET-DRY comes in the form of a bar which is neatly encased in a plastic basket. You simply clip the basket to any corner of the upper rack of your dishwasher. Remember to buy JET-DRY. At grocery stores and dishwasher dealers.

DECORATING NEWSLETTER

HOOKED. Is Aunt Agatha handy with a crochet hook? Consider yourself lucky and encourage her if she wants to crochet you an afghan, or even better, a bedspread. Put her to work at once. Supply her with heavy, heavy yarn in the colors you love: white, deep purple, acid green, sulphur yellow, Mexican pink, or zany zinnia orange. Mark our word, the crochet look is coming back, but fast. The other day we saw a marvelous example of crochet work in food stylist Maggie Waldron's San Francisco house. She has a modern wicker couch with the seat and back cushions upholstered in white crochet. And on our own home front, take a look at the tomato-red bedspread shown in our March issue.

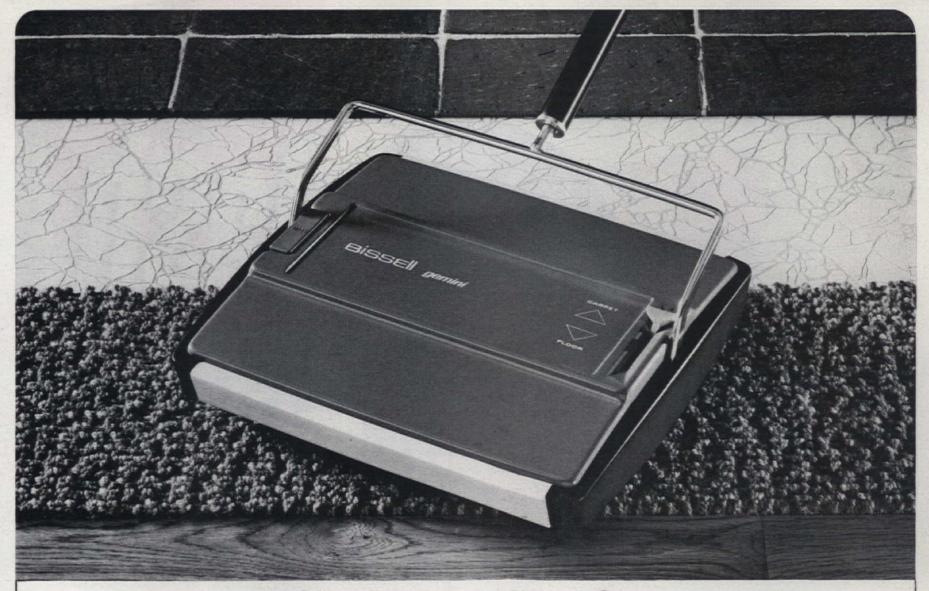

TIGER, TIGER...very bright, Marcelle Tolkoff (whom we interviewed recently), of Tiger Fabric, Inc. and Tiger Tissue, fits the description well. Marcelle is the partner in charge of design at Tiger. If the name sounds familiar it's because we've shown many Tiger prints in the decorating pages of American Home in the past two years and hope to show many more. Tiger fabrics and vinyls are young, gay, bright, zingy, pepped up-they're what's happening. Says Marcelle, "Today nobody decorates for ever. All we want is something around the house that'll make us feel good-happythat'll make us laugh. We buy things because they give us a lift. Status used to be stodgy, now it's smart to have a house that's smashing, that's the newest." What she brought to home furnishings from her ready-to-wear background is an uninhibited sense of color. "Decorating colors were always keyed to paint colors which had to be softer, grayer, more pastel because they were used in such big areas. I don't feel that it's important to coordinate with paint colors, I just do what looks good." Typical Tiger colors are: lettuce green with white and pink, black backgrounds with clear pastels ... they're all clean, crisp, sharp. Marcelle calls herself average. "I have a husband (Dan Tolkoff is the partner in charge of serious business at Tiger), two sub-teen bopper kids, a new second home, I shop at the supermarket-and I'm sure that if I like something every other woman like me is going to like it too." We don't think Marcelle is average at all, but supercharged with a creative energy that turned a small dress-goods firm into a powerhouse of fashion with nationwide distribution. Tiger products are all over.

The setting for our luncheon interview is worth noting too-New York's newest pub, Act I, on the 16th floor of the Allied Chemical Building in Times Square. The decor is an amusing mixture of Tudor and turn-of-the-century: brick walls, wicker armchairs (stained dark brown and upholstered in paisley), and terra-cotta tablecloths.

SCRUBBED . . . BLEACHED? Of course we mean your furniture, not your face or hair. Update your house with homey, honey-colored wood pieces in oak or pine; or with wicker, willow, and rattan at their blond best. Don't think of whole rooms, but rather in terms of single pieces for blond accents and contrast. Try: a headboard, occasional chair, a table or a collection of hampers, a love seat or lamp base, a clutch of wooden objects-they'll all do the trick. This wood is good with modern, Early American, Country English, eclectic.

VELVET? No, just a look-alike. That's the completely new, nonwoven blanket by West Point Pepperell. It will be offered in the firm's Lady Pepperell (Miralux) and Martex (Luxor) lines. The lightweight, two-pound blanket is made of a synthetic foam and nylon webbing core to which nylon fibers have been electrostatically bonded. It is said to be completely and endlessly washable. Four sizes, twin through king, are available in pastels to coordinate with Lady Pepperell and three with Martex sheet colors; several prints too. Prices range from $12.95 to $24.95.

The woman who wore the first geometric haircut broke the rules. Columbus broke the rules. Florence Nightingale broke the rules. And Dash broke the rules.

To make a breakthrough detergent for automatic washers, somebody had to break the rules. Dash did.

Dash cleans cleaner than any powder made for all automatics...because Dash broke the rules to give you a cleaner wash.

The Rules	and how Dash broke them.
1) Measure 1 ¹ / ₄ cups per washload.	Dash traded powder for power. You use only ¾ cup of Dash where sudsing detergents recommend 1¼ cups. Concentrated fury. We call Dash "The Little Giant."
2) Make lovely suds.	Dash swapped excess suds (they can clog your wash) for clear, clean rinsing.
3) Be all things to all women.a) Clean dishes, woodwork, tiles and tires, as well as clothes.b) Wash in a wringer and tub as well as machine.	a) Dash is for laundry and only laundry.b) Dash is for automatics and only automatics.

BE INFORMAL: It's such fun

Someday somebody's dictionary will tell you what words go with what. Informal goes with fun it will say. Informal goes with relaxation. Informal goes with easygoing. But the most up-todate dictionary of all will tell you that informal also goes with style, a sense of taste, and behind all the casualness, a bit of planning on your part. The food must fit the mood; tables are copasetic. There's comfort all around for everybody. On these pages we show you what we mean by this new informality. You don't need a seagoing yacht to be informal and/or have fun. A simple sunfish will do. A deck is nice but not mandatory. If you don't have a pool there's no reason in the world why you can't gather the crowd around for a little banjo plunking, a keg of beer, or a fabulous cioppino. So come on with us—be informal and have fun!

LET'S HAVE A PARTY JUST LIKE THAT!

The best summer parties are the ones that just happen. At a moment's notice they're on and all you need is the smallest of excuses. Celebrate the first blooming of your nasturtiums or someone's winning the tennis tournament. Have a party for no other reason than you want to share your pool, deck, or garden with a group of good friends. Our point is to be relaxed and informal. Here and on the following pages we give you ideas on how to set your party table—in each case around a menu. Don't be timid. This isn't the time for dainty prints and delicate flowers. Come up with walloping colors, strong shapes, and smashing patterns. Improvise! Use a wire vegetable basket for a bread holder, kitchen towels for napkins, paint pails for wine coolers. Mix casual materials with flair—plain pine with melamine, stainless steel with cotton fabrics. Make much of scale. For a clean, uncluttered look, think big. But above all, make it fun. Here are the tables. Party food recipes begin on page 106.

SERVE CURRY ON A CART

Greatest party prop of all time is a good, big serving cart. Use it to roll the main dish from table to table, for dessert and coffee if you're serving buffet style. Break up large parties into small groups , with small round tables. They make for good talk. Our tables were set with a wild cotton dress fabric taped on for simplicity. Ironstone plates have strong shapes, so do the candles. We used octagonal tiles as place cards, lettered them with felt-tipped markers. No further decorations are needed. We think it's fun to let the guests mingle once the main course has been eaten. Have them circulate by serving coffee and dessert in another part of the forest. Please turn the page

SEA FARE AT THE DOCK

Everybody goes near the water for Cioppino-California's answer to the bouillabaisse. (See how to make it on page 102.) Start with a big pine-top table, add navy blue melamine plates, heavy glass goblets. Provide guests with he-man-size napkins, alias red-and-white-checked dishcloths. For a centerpiece, we like huge glass goblets filled with bread sticks and fruit on bright enamel aircraft plaques. White wine is cooled in inexpensive paint buckets. To freshen up, each guest has a facecloth wrung out in hot, lemon-scented water. Then it's up the dock a piece for after-dinner cheese, breads held high in a shopping basket, espresso. A small mobile refrigerator keeps the goodies cold. Please turn the page

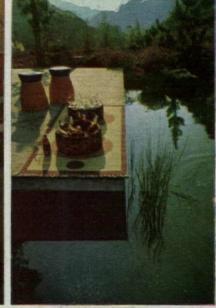

SALADS BY THE POOL

Simplest way to entertain on a summer's day is with salads. They're beautiful and two are better than one. Set out your all-salad meal at the very last moment. Let your guests find their own spot in the sun or under the shade of a small paper parasol. Have a basketful of them along with piles of pillows. Pretty with salads is a mélange of patterns: melamine dishes, cotton napkins, striped tablecloth. For a centerpiece we've pulled the napkins through the wire loops of egg holders that are topped with florists' cornucopias. Wire vegetable baskets lined with crisp napkins hold breads. HORS D'OEUVRES CAN MAKE A MEAL

Most casual of all is the all-over-the-lot party where guests feast on hors d'oeuvres and drink ice cold beer. Each guest cooks his own tempting tidbits on the hibachi or cuts thin slices of beef that are cooked on the spit. In the good-idea department: Plenty of big thirsty towels handy for those who are for a leisurely dip. Linen dish towels pulled through a bamboo fence to serve as napkins. Half-round rattan tables that can be carried wherever the shade is the deepest, the view the prettiest (upside down they make comfortable backrests). Lots of pillows for lounging in sybaritic ease on decks or watching the carp dart back and forth in the fish pond.

GARDENS TO LIVE IN

Your garden is a natural gathering place for family and friends; the perfect place to loaf and invite your soul. To help you organize your outdoors, we have assembled four gardens, all designed for alfresco living, all reflecting the style and pace of their owners' lives as well as the architecture of their homes. The garden shown below, sheltered on three sides by the wings of the house, is perfect for intimate dining. It's paved with concrete pads and ajuga groundcover, a perennial that never needs trimming. Rhododendron and andromeda provide flowers and fragrance in the spring, evergreen foliage all year. There is a small goldenrain tree by the fence. Railroad-tie steps lead to a terrace used for large summer parties. Joel Kalemis, of Suburbia Gardens, designed the garden for Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dolnick, Chesterfield, Missouri.

When guests arrive at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Ford Lovelace, Lafayette, California (opposite), they leave their cars outside the metal gate and enter a tranguil courtyard garden. The roof of the carport extends into the entry court over the aggregate reflecting pool and fountain. White-washed walls were designed by the landscape architect to emphasize the entrance and conceal the parking area. The planting is simple, consisting of spiky dwarf agapanthus in front of the reflecting pool, Japanese maple and pennisetum to the left. Under the olive tree are rosemary and gazania 'Copper King.' The principal outdoor living area is a terrace at the back of the house. It's accessible from the kitchen, dining, and bedrooms, and functions as dining area and sunning deck. On a lower level are the pool and a canopy-shaded retreat. The paving surrounding the pool is aggregate and brick, a nonslip surface easy on swimmers' feet as well as the spike-heeled shoes of party guests. There are no large trees for shade, so the canopy of twelve-inch canvas strips, alternating blue and yellow, was created to protect bathers from the blazing sun. The structure is redwood and Douglas fir. Because color was used sparingly, the garden blends into the surrounding landscape of duncolored hills. Turn the page for more beautiful outdoor living rooms.

A setting for outdoor dining should be conducive to conversation as well as attractive, For small groups a sense of coziness—provided here by the fence and walls of the house—contributes to the congeniality of the garden room.

GARDENS TO LIVE IN

The 45x35 foot lot was expanded by adding a deck set on pilings in the water. It serves as cabana and hammock nook (right). An overhead sprinkler makes daily watering of fuchsias a snap. Boxwood, juniper, eugenia, and fan palms thrive in the steep bank between deck and house. Opposite, right, the cabana and dock as seen from the house.

Architect: Allan Steinau, A.I.A.

Dr. and Mrs. Corwin Hinshaw, the intrepid sailors whose deck we show above, prefer to man the tiller instead of tilling the soil. They garden in containers and use the following for all-year color in Belvedere, California: azaleas, sweetpeas, bulbs, camellias. Fuchsias thrive in a protected spot under the lath roof.

Badminton and swimming have been planned for the garden (below) of Mr. and Mrs. William Lindlow, San Rafael, California. The entry combines lawn, broad brick walk, and well-scaled foundation planting. A concrete stepping-stone path, bordered with marigolds and begonias, leads from garage to front door. The backyard is divided into activity areas, each section shielded by a planting, change of level, or wooden baffle. Brick paths unify the entire landscape. (See plan on opposite page.)

A permanent planting of rhododendrons, yew, and tropical plants (opposite, below left) is easy to care for. Brick widens the driveway to two lanes for maneuverability.

Patio just outside the family room (center, below), offers sun and filtered light. Ivy and lawn areas soften the brick paving. Steps lead to pool.

The fire-pit area (below) is used primarily for heat, toasting marshmallows, popping corn. It extends the outdoor season into fall and is used for late-summer foggy evenings. Benches are built-in.

The area plan (right) illustrates how economically space has been organized and the relationship of each area to the house.

THE INFORMAL APPROACH

Informal—or call it casual—is a fairly new concept in decorating. To be successful it must be casual on purpose! There can be nothing chancy, nothing accidental about a casual room. Without planning, it will end up haphazard, straggly, even sloppy. Whether something is informal or not is largely a question of materials and design. Oak and pine are less formal than mahogany, slate less formal than marble, rush less formal than caning. Then there are those furnishings that are intrinsically casual. No matter what a rocking chair is made of or where it is used, it remains a casual piece of furniture. The same holds true for the butcher block table, the French baker's rack. Finally, a casual look is achieved through the use and arrangement of furnishings even though they are not casual in material or design. A pair of Georgian silver candlesticks on an oak kitchen table is a good example. See here what we mean by this new informality. It's fun!

VACATION FROM CARE

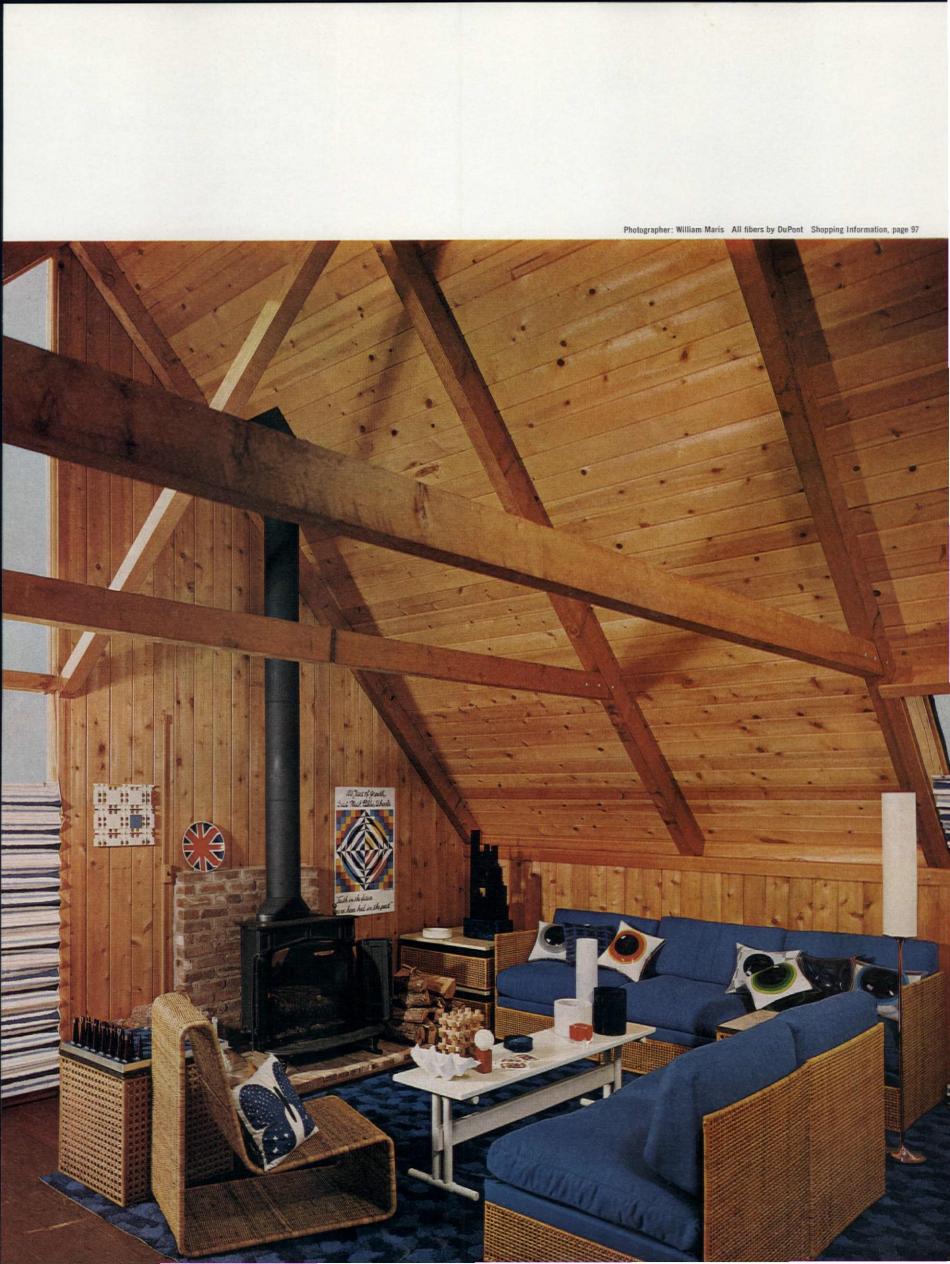

Nowhere should life be more free and easy than in a vacation house. But to prove that a vacation house can also be shipshape we decorated one ourselves. This house, designed by Ben Flynn, sits on the dunes along Long Island's South Shore. It was furnished with a family of four in mind: parents plus a pair of gregarious small boys. The house had to be comfortable since it is lived in the whole summer long. It also had to be easy to care for. That's why we used synthetic fibers throughout for fabrics, floor coverings, linens, and furniture fillings. We picked basic furnishings that are casual by design and made of casual materials: handsome wicker, loose-cushioned sofas, rugged oak triple deckers for the boys' room. Since we contend that a vacation house should have at least some of the comforts and good looks of home, we stocked the galley with the best-looking casual dinnerware and glass we could find. We hung the walls with inexpensive works of art. Even the most informal decorating needs some recurring motifs to give it cohesiveness. Ours are the wicker pieces, the simple shapes of modern lamps, and the geometric patterns that pop up in the fabrics that are used throughout.

In living area (opposite) modern wicker pieces are grouped around an old Franklin stove. Contrasting pleasantly with the rough, honey-tone pine walls and beams: boldly patterned area rug, smooth white lacquer, royal blue upholstery.

Breakfast is served on a teak-top table in galley area (above left). Laminated shades control bright summer sun.

Boys' room will sleep six. For organization, youngsters are given numbers. Triple-decker bunks have permanently covered mattresses. Children sleep in bedding rolls, keep gear and belongings in numbered boxes.

Master bedroom is done in shocking pink, white, and black. Wicker beds repeat decorative theme; dacron-filled quilts turn into bedspreads in the morning. Wall-to-wall make-up table is complete with desk.

"The materials cost $250 and it took a weekend to assemble the precut lumber." The deck (below) Mr. Richard Ohno of Branford, Connecticut, is referring to, is located on the street side of the Ohno house with privacy provided by a louvered fence. A deep roof overhang shades the boardwalks next to the gravel court, but most of the deck receives direct sunlightjust right for sunbathing. The elevated section in the center is used as a combination bench-table-display area. Mrs. Ohno commented on the fun they've had landscaping the garden-from the new plants added each year to the dogwood tree gleaned from her mother-in-law's property.

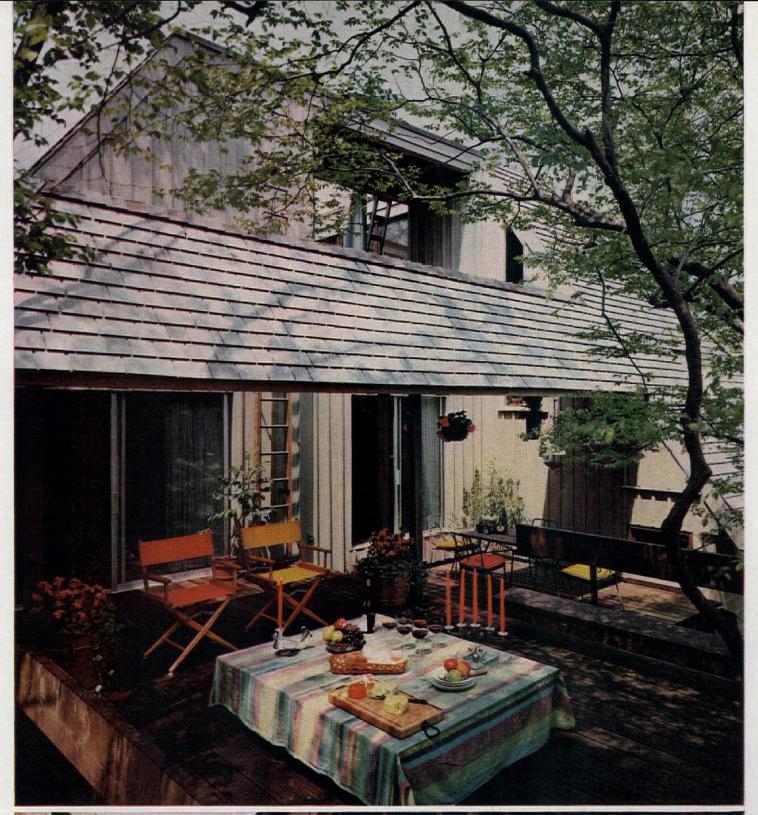

DECKS WITH A DIFFERENCE

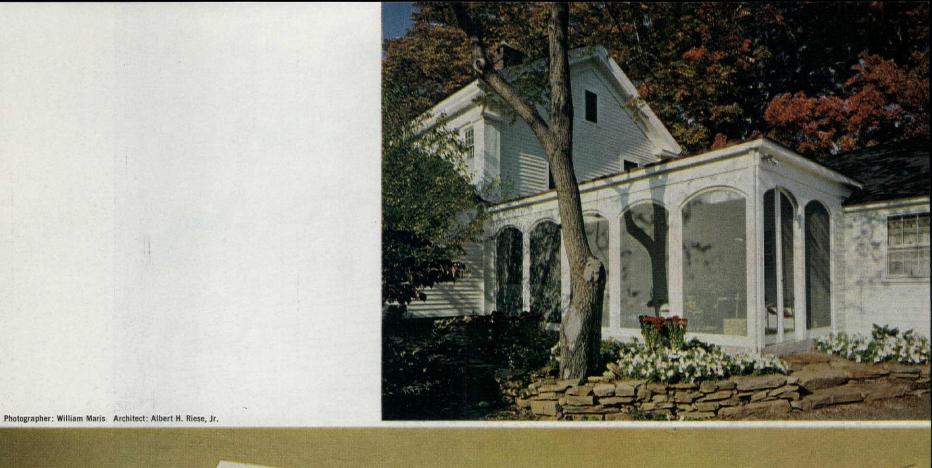

Decks have been around quite a while. But no longer are they crude little platforms nailed to the back of the house. They have reached such a degree of sophistication that houses are often designed around a deck or even several of them. If a deck wasn't included as part of the original design, it is often added and the walls of the house extended with fencing so the house seems to surround it. The decks of today act as outdoor rooms, part of the living space offering the paradoxical benefits of open air and seclusion, a place for quiet reading or lively partying. The two here show the range of possibilities—from dappled shade to bright sunlight. You can build the deck simultaneously with the house or add it several years later.

This deck (opposite page) belongs to the Charles E. Roy family of Guilford, Connecticut, Mr. Roy, who designed it, made good use of a relatively small area by dividing the 24-foot-square hemlock deck into three levels. He explained, "One half is level with the living room, the rest is in two levels, leading to the ground and a small tool room." This tri-level arrangement has been successful for entertaining. "At one party we had up to 75 guests without crowding the house. We have privacy from neighbors, too, since the house surrounds the deck on three sides." Partial shading is provided by a shingled overhang.

The arch motif and skylights make this screened porch (left and below) an unusually pretty one. The play of light and shadow from the skylights extends to the adjoining rooms. Says the owner, Mrs. George Sessions Perry of Guilford, Connecticut, "I don't know how I ever did without it. I use it so much, especially for meals and entertaining. I like to putter around in the flower arranging room next to it too." Porch was built on old terrace.

The porch below was added off the living room of the old Colonial house by Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh Strong of Lyme, Connecticut. "It gives us the extra living space we needed and it's a great play area for the children," says Mrs. Strong. "Caesar, our St. Bernard, enjoys it as much as the rest of the family. And best of all, it has a wonderful view year round." The stone floor and old barn siding blend well with the traditional style of the house.

REMEMBER SCREENED PORCHES?

Somewhere in everyone's fondest memory there's a screened porch. A wonderful, big, comfortable porch with glider and wicker furniture and screens to keep the cool in and the mosquitoes out. Remember? It's where you used to enjoy a cold lemonade on a hot summer afternoon, where the family gathered for the excitement of a sudden summer thunderstorm. Wasn't it a heavenly place to curl up and read on a lazy afternoon, to nap during a quiet summer rain? We couldn't be happier that the screened porch is making a glorious return. What better place for Sunday breakfasts, any-night suppers or entertaining, children's games, Saturday cocktails, just plain relaxing? Who knows? Maybe next year they'll bring back gliders and porch swings!

RIVER HOUSE REVISITED

About a year ago-in our May 1966 issue, to be exact-we published two photos of this house in a roundup of patio and terrace ideas. Since then we've had so many requests for plans of "the house by the river" that we decided to make it one of our blueprint and study plan houses. To order plans, see page 111. The site, on the banks of the Goodwives River in Connecticut, surprisingly, had been neglected for years. A ramshackle barn on the land seemed to deter anyone looking for property. Finally, it was bought by the Edwin Baileys who designed and built this weatheredlooking Early American house. Since it is a long, narrow lot (only 35 feet wide where the house stands), the house is close to the road, just as in the old days when the highway was a source of diverting sights for lonely country settlers. The lot is steeply sloped so that the flagstone terrace is hidden away down a flight of stairs behind the wooden fence.

BLUEPRINT ORDER FORM ON PAGE 111 Study Plan Also Available

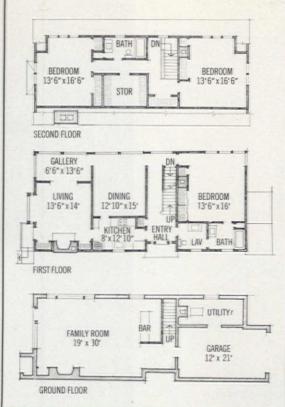

Living room (above) has view of terrace through bay window. Adjoining gallery overlooks river behind house.

Completely hidden from view of passers-by is this flagstone terrace (opposite), where the family enjoys the peace and privacy of country living. Behind the fence and earth bank, they are hardly aware of sound from the road. The family room is downstairs and has direct access to the terrace, which is especially convenient for entertaining.

The low, snug house has the small-paned windows and narrow clapboards characteristic of Early American styles. Recessed doorway and bay window relieve otherwise plain exterior. Unpainted wood is treated with preservative and will darken in time. Low wall separating house from road is built of used brick.

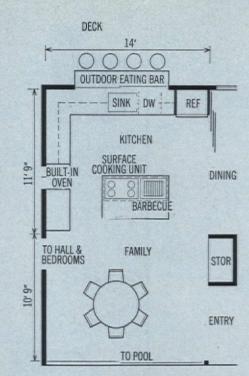

Here's a kitchen that takes to entertaining like a teen-ager takes to the latest dance. And no wonder—it was designed for people. As the owners, Mr. and Mrs. James Rector Lucas, put it: "We like to do a lot of entertaining—family style. We don't want people to have to get baby-sitters when they come to our house, so we almost always include the children. Our entertaining centers around the pool and the kitchen." They keep things informal and simple, so it's fun for everyone and very little work. Easily done in this kitchen! The success of the kitchen lies in its location and the practical layout of the working area. Jim Lucas, an architect, planned the placement of the kitchen right in the center of activity. Running the full depth of the house, it separates the children's wing on one side from the adult area on the other. Sliding glass doors open the entire family room end of the kitchen to the patio and pool. When the doors are open it becomes almost a part of the outdoors, a point Mrs. Lucas particularly likes. "I can come in from the pool to cook and still be included in the action." At the other end of the kitchen a pass-through window over the sink joins it to a generous redwood deck with an outdoor bar and stools for snacks and lunches. The cooking island does double duty as a serving counter. It has a cook top, large charcoal grill, and wide, tile-surfaced counter, where Mrs. Lucas sets up hot serve-yourself buffets. Guests can help themselves to casseroles from the cook top, flip their own burgers on the grill, and dig into salad on the counter. The kitchen appliances are situated so they form a basic working pattern, close enough to one another for efficiency, yet far enough apart to allow several people to move around in it at once-very helpful with five active children (plus friends) around the house! One of the Lucas boys belongs to a teen-age band which was about to range in full volume when our editors visited the Lucases. The boys call themselves the "Four Corners," but Mr. Lucas elects to think of them as the "What Fors." Their get-together for rehearsal was reason enough for a lively party, so we saw this kitchen in action—and it really swings!

WHERE THE ACTION IS

id you ever cut hardcooked eggs and find dark rings around the yolks—or bake a beautiful custard and have it "weep"?
What causes this?

The answer is simple. There are two secrets of turning out perfect egg dishes every time: temperature and time. Eggs do not like high heat nor do they like to be cooked too long. Either one or both will cause eggs that are cooked in the shell or out to be tough and leathery, or will overcook a baked or soft custard and cause it to curdle.

It is easy to hard cook an egg perfectly. You can do it one of two ways:

THE COLD-WATER METHOD

- 1. Put eggs in saucepan and add enough water so it is 1 inch above the eggs.
- 2. Place over heat and bring to boiling rapidly.
- 3. As soon as the water boils, turn off heat or remove pan from unit or burner to prevent further cooking.

4. Cover pan and let eggs stand in water 15 minutes.

5. Cool the eggs promptly in cold water. This prevents further cooking, which is so important if you want to avoid having a discolored egg yolk. It also makes it easier to remove the shells.

BOILING WATER METHOD

1. Put enough water into saucepan to cover eggs (but do not put eggs in pan).

2. To avoid cracked shells let eggs stand in bowl of warm water. Bring water in pan to boiling. Transfer eggs with a spoon.

- 3. Reduce heat to keep water below simmering. Hold 20 minutes.
- 4. Remove from heat. Cool promptly in cold water.

CUSTARDS

Now about custards. Custards are mixtures of milk, eggs, salt, sweetening, and flavoring. A soft custard is cooked in a double boiler over hot water and stirred constantly. Soft custard is especially good served over fruit—fresh, cooked, or canned; and over whipped gelatin desserts or steamed puddings. Firm custards may be baked or steamed. As with all egg cookery, care must be taken not to overcook custards.

2 cups milk 3 eggs 1/4 cup sugar 1/4 teaspoon salt 1 teaspoon vanilla

- Heat milk in top of double boiler until tiny bubbles appear around the edge.
 Remove from heat. This is the test for scalded milk.
- 2. Beat eggs in a medium-size bowl just until they are blended. Stir in sugar and salt.
- 3. Add hot milk very slowly, stirring constantly. Pour into top of double boiler.

4. Set over (not in) hot, not boiling, water in bottom of double boiler. Cook, stirring constantly, until custard is thick enough to coat the spoon with a thin film. Remove from heat at once.

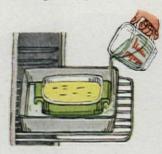

5. Remove top of double boiler and set in a bowl or pan of cold water to cool custard quickly, or pour custard into a cool bowl immediately. 6. Cool custard, Stir in vanilla. Cover and refrigerate. Makes 6 servings.

2 cups milk 2 eggs ½ cup sugar ¼ teaspoon salt 1 teaspoon vanilla

- 1. Heat oven to 350° F.
- 2. Heat milk in saucepan just until bubbles appear around the edge. Remove from heat.
- 3. Beat eggs in medium-size bowl just until they are blended. Stir in sugar and salt.
- 4. Add hot milk very slowly, stirring constantly. Stir in vanilla.
- 5. Pour into 1½-quart baking dish. Set dish in larger pan. Place on oven rack. If you like the flavor of nutmeg you can sprinkle the top of your custard with ground nutmeg at this point.

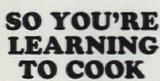

6. Pour hot water into larger pan until level of water is even with level of custard in baking dish. This is a most important step in baking custard. The water bath protects the custard during baking and helps to keep it from overcooking. You may have seen a baked custard in which the bottom portion was smooth and velvety and the top inch or so was full of tiny holes or bubbles. The levels of water and custard should be the same so all the custard is protected and this bubbly appearance will be avoided.

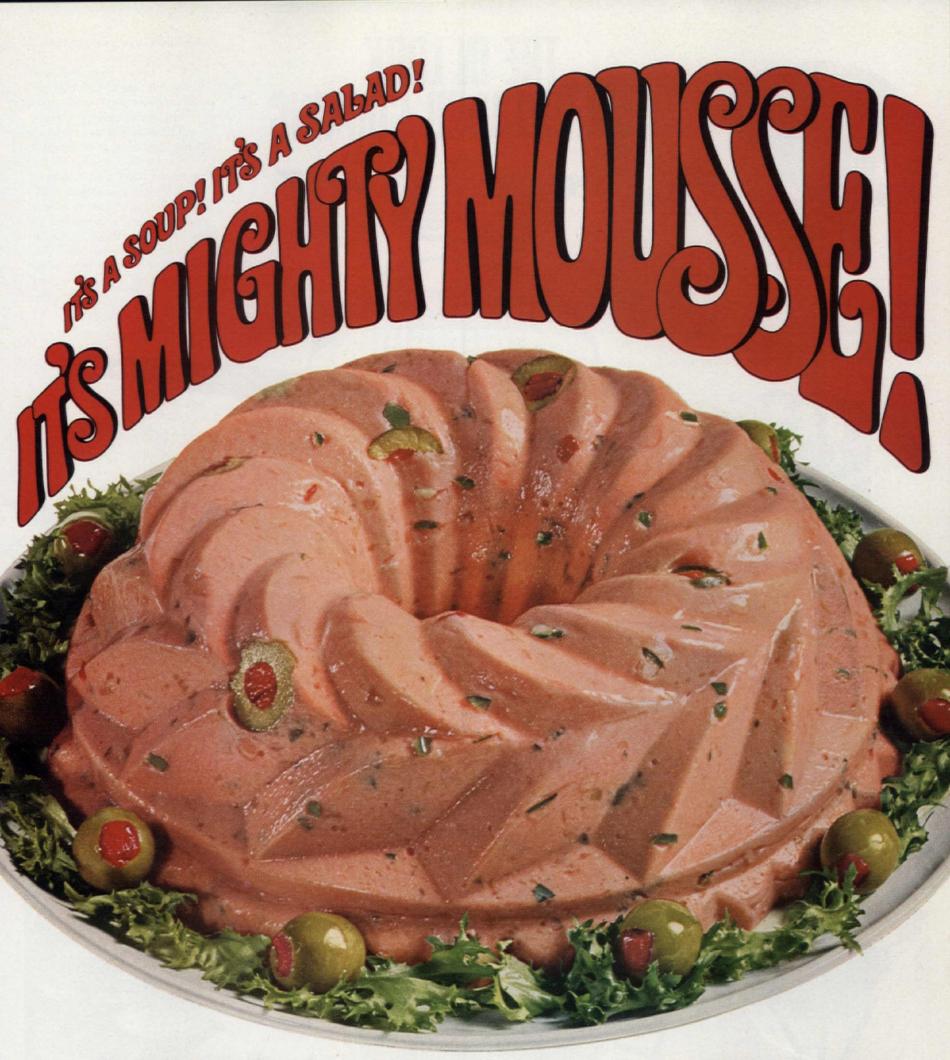

7. Bake 40 to 45 minutes or until a thinbladed knife inserted 1 inch from the edge comes out clean. The center will be soft but will set as the custard cools because the eggs will continue to cook. Remove from oven. Cool. Chill. Makes 6 servings.

Note: Custard may be baked in 6 custard cups and served in them, or may be unmolded after being chilled.

Campbell's Tomato Soup shapes up as a delicious dish!

Mold a salad into a brand-new main dish. Cool-looking. Creamy-tasting. Easy-fixing. Big on flavor, too, because you make it with Campbell's Tomato Soup and Swanson Boned Chicken. Serve with crisp rolls, cake, iced tea or coffee.

Mighty Mousse

1 can (103/4 ounces) Campbell's Tomato Soup ½ cup sour cream 1 tbsp. lemon juice

- 2 envelopes unflavored gelatine
- 1 can Swanson Boned Chicken, cut up
- 3/4 cup chopped cucumber 1/4 cup sliced stuffed olives

2 tbsp. minced onion

In bowl, gradually blend soup into sour cream; add lemon juice, $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. salt, and dash pepper. Soften gelatine in 1 soup can water; stir over low heat until gelatine is dissolved. Remove from heat; blend with soup mixture. Chill until slightly thickened; fold in remaining ingredients. Pour into five-cup mold. Chill your Mighty Mousse for four hours. Makes four servings.

When you have two Blue Bonnet Margarines with the same delectable flavor...

Which one should you buy?

Both. Soft for sensational spreading. Regular for satisfying cooking. Either way, you get the same mouth-watering flavor that has made Blue Bonnet America's number-one margarine. Just remember: New Soft Blue Bonnet spreads easier. It's low in saturated fat. And it comes in a handy tub with a new snap-open, see-through lid. But, soft or regular, you simply can't beat that great Blue Bonnet flavor. That's why you need both Blue Bonnet margarines—now.

WHY PEOPLE NEVER LEAVE HOME

The sun never sets on this friendly, inviting family room in the home of Jack and Jane Snyder of Miami Shores, Florida. The room is virtually a self-contained unit with its own living, dining, and cooking areas and it's just a step away from the patio and pool. The Snyders do most of their relaxing and entertaining here as do their three growing children. Whenever there's a party there's no need to disturb the rest of the household. Jack Snyder is an architect, Jane is an interior designer. They pooled their talents to produce the charming results you see here.

Cheerful highceilinged room has colorful ceramic tile floor, impervious to dancing. Furniture can be used inside or out. Built-in barbecue (lower photo) is used often. Louvered doors hide storage, refrigerator, and sink. Outside the wide doorway are the pool and patio, 18 huge oaks, and a special garden house for Mr. Snyder's orchids.

Must Gas Stations Be Garish?

on vast parking lots, and, of course, gas stations. These things are splendid along the highway but they don't belong downtown like drive-in movies. They make the city unlivable for people born with feet, not wheels.

Downtown we simply can't afford to yield the gas station separate space all its own; it must be fitted into the cityscape. And that means that we should integrate them into city buildings, such as parking garages and the basements of office structures. In Europe they have been doing it for years. And in Washington, D. C., a big "gallonage" service station has been operating successfully for many vears in the lower level of the Esso Building, near the Capitol, catercorner from the National Gallery of Art, The building will soon be torn down, not because the gas station bothered anyone, but to make room for a sunken freeway with a new Labor Department building on top.

In the low-residential areas of town and in the suburbs the logical place for gas stations is the neighborhood shopping center. Since most people must drive there, they should be able to fill their tanks at the same time. Most of us have quite enough driving to do as it is

But a good shopping center, too, should be a compact place, a sort of agora and a pleasant setting which a gas station, of course, disrupts like a missing tooth in the smile of an otherwise pretty girl. So here, too, that gap should be covered by a handsome building that could serve all kinds of purposes which give life and meaning to the agora. It could house a library or a teen-age center for dances, meetings, and various activities. It could house a bowling alley or provide office space for doctors, lawyers, and others.

Architects Cooper and Auerbach have designed just such a gas stationcommunity building and though it hasn't been built yet, their model is a Iulu. It is to accommodate the aboutto-be-displaced Esso station near the Capitol I mentioned, and will be located across Staunton Park in a residential neighborhood.

The building sits on a landscaped embankment pierced by six driveways that lead into the service station within. Over the embankment is a platform that holds a small community plaza that opens to the park and is enclosed on three sides by a threestory office building. The plaza is lined with a variety of shops and restaurants. The structure will obviously profit both the neighborhood and its owners.

Contrary to a widespread myth, there seems to be no safety or fire hazards if you put a gas station inside a building. Insurance statistics show that there is less danger of fire than in restaurants, doctors' offices, schools, food stores, taverns, or churches. The myth is often advanced by irate property owners and zoning officials who oppose service stations not because they are dangerous but because they are eyesores.

The answer, however, is not to restrict them but to design them not to be eyesores.

WE REGRET

Sometimes we at American Home are overly enthusiastic about our own patriotism and our own name. In our April issue we presented a bedroom, designed for two young American boys, in a glorious red-white-blue color scheme. It was a happy, fresh-as-the-Fourth-of-July kind of room we thought our readers would enjoy to have in their own home. Unfortunately, many of our readers took exception to a group of pillows covered in a fabric that could have been construed as a replica of our Flag. This was not the case as the material used was indeed not our Flag. We are sorry that these pillows did offend many of our readers and are grateful for their calling this to our attention. Certainly no disrespect for our Flag was intended.

SPRUCE UP YOUR OUTDOOR FURNITURE

By MERLE E. DOWD

Now's the time to dust off your stored summer furniture, repair it, if necessary, and get it ready for outdoor living. Patio tables, chairs, lounges, and barbecue equipment take a beating from rain and sun. Here's how to give them new life.

ALUMINUM FURNITURE

Despite their rust resistance, aluminum frames for chairs and tables become dull, pitted, or dirty. Remove dust and dirt with a stiff brush and a damp cloth. If you plan to replace any canvas or plastic, take frames apart before cleaning.

Polish aluminum frames with detergent-soaked steel-wool pads, rinse quickly, and remove residue with a dry cloth. Auto rubbing compound or metal polish removes stubborn spots and rough corrosion. Coat aluminum parts with auto paste wax or spray on lacquer or clear finish.

WROUGHT-IRON AND STEEL FURNITURE

True wrought iron is manufactured not to rust. Treat peeling paint or spots of rust like steel pieces (below).

Steel tube or formed-sheet furniture rusts in time when exposed to rain, dew, and temperature changes—all the environment of lawn and patio furniture. Remove any flaky rust with a stiff wire brush, sandpaper, or steel wool. Use a band of sanding cloth on round legs or arms with a shoe-shine-rag motion. Roughen the glossy surface of tight, remaining paint with sandpaper. If paint is loose or spotty, coat the whole piece with water-rinse paint remover. Polish clean metal evenly. Replace rusted screws or bolts with zinc-coated ones.

Spray or brush on an undercoat of special dampproof antirust primer immediately after wiping with a tack rag. Apply two finish coats of exterior enamel, preferably one of the metalfinishing topcoats designed to cover antirust primers. Sand the first enamel coat lightly. Heat-resistant paints are available for barbecue outfits.

WOOD FURNITURE

Good summer furniture can be rebuilt and refinished to last for years. If possible, replace any broken or cracked wood pieces before refinishing. Select wood that closely matches the original for clear-finished furniture. Use the old piece as a pattern. Replace any hardware with new pieces or fasteners of the same size, and use a center punch to deform threads slightly at the nut. A slight mashing of thread metal keeps the nut from unscrewing in use, but still allows removal of the nut, if necessary with a wrench.

Examine the joints and repair any worn or loose pieces. Screw and glue triangular blocks in the corners of wobbly seat frames, for example. If rungs or legs are loose, remove them, clean off all glue, then reinsert the legs and spreaders with fresh glue. Cracked or broken rungs can be reglued and wrapped tightly with cord over wax paper until glue sets. Use a 100 percent waterproof wood glue for rebuilding outdoor furniture. For extra strength where wood may have broken or split, screw metal mending plates to pieces out of sight. Pull bad splits in wood seats or arm rails together with clamps, then fasten with wiggle nails or cleats screwed to the underside. Fill any cracks with wood putty and sand before refinishing.

Redwood and cedar chairs, tables, and picnic sets are normally finished clear to reveal their true wood color. Remove all cracked or spalling varnish coatings from redwood and cedar. Water-rinse paint remover quickly loosens the coating. Rinse with clear water and allow to dry thoroughly. Both redwood and cedar are soft woods that dent or scratch easily. If possible, use a powered belt or oscillating sander to remove surface stains and marks. Finish with progressively finer sandpaper, but be careful of splinters, particularly when rounding edges and corners.

To finish redwood and cedar in their natural color without varnish, apply several soaking layers of a clear or lightly tinted wood stain, a water-proofing penetrating finish, or a wood preservative. Apply these penetrating finishes only when the wood is thoroughly dry, so the porous wood will soak up the finish.

If a hard, clear coating is desired (to prevent grease or other stains from soaking in), apply at least three coats of a marine spar varnish to the bare wood—no sealer undercoat. Select one of the marine varnishes that includes an ultraviolet-resistant additive to extend its life.

Painted furniture must be clean and sound before repainting. Remove any plastic or canvas pieces before starting to refinish. If the old paint finish is cracking or peeling, scrape or coarse-sand it down to the bare wood. For large areas use a waterrinse remover. Sand all of the pieces to remove any raised grain, splinters, or rough edges. Mound over any screw, nail, or dowel holes with wood putty, then sand smooth when hard.

Apply a penetrating undercoat or primer after wood is thoroughly dry. Sand this undercoat lightly with worn 6/0 paper; dust with a tack rag. Follow with two coats of an exterior enamel—not a house paint.

PLASTIC WEBBING

Replace worn, torn, frayed, and stretched seats and backs with bright, new plastic webbing. On aluminum or steel frames, fold webbing ends into two triangles; fold tip back to provide at least four layers and a single point for fastening. Attach ends of webbing to frame with a washer under a tapping screw.

On wood furniture, tack webbing to frame with nonrusting tacks. Wrap webbing around attaching rung, then use at least three tacks.

CANVAS OR DUCK

Seats and backs for furniture made of heavy cotton duck are best sewed with a loop for attaching ends to metal or wood bars. Use the original seat or back as a pattern; allow for stretching of the original. Metal furniture can usually be taken apart to slip old canvas seats and backs off and replacements on. Examine wood furniture seat- and back-support rungs for fasteners that can be removed. Follow the original—if canvas or plastic was tacked onto the frame. fasten replacement pieces with tacks. If loops were sewn in and slipped over rungs, slip on new seats or backs. When sewing seams, double back ends and sew a second seam for greater strength. Sometimes a tear, slit, or hole can be patched. Feather edges of a tear by removing a few of the threads parallel to the opening. Cut a patch of roughly the same material and cement it behind the tear with fabric-mending cement.

Worn or faded canvas seats and backs can be brightened by painting or treating with a fabric spray. One coat covers solid colors. Apply two coats over plaids or stripes.

Ready-made replacements can be bought for yacht, director, butterfly, circle, and sling chairs, chaises, or cots. Simply slip them onto frames over dowels or metal tubes.

RATTAN FURNITURE

The many curved, rounded pieces and the wrapped joints of rattan furniture require patience to refinish. If the original finish was shellac, remove any loose or scaly bits with a brush followed by a cloth soaked in alcohol (shellac thinner). If the old finish was varnish or paint, brush on a water-rinse paint remover. Use an old toothbrush to work on joints, then rinse off. Sand the large areas until they are smooth; use a dulltipped knife or a sharp-pointed wood rasp to clean out crevices and joints. Treat each nail with a clear, rustproofing sealer. To repair joints that have broken or worked loose, soak bamboo bindings in water until they bend like cord. Apply waterproof glue to the joint. Tack one end of the binding, wrap tightly, and fasten end with a zinc-coated brad.

WICKER, PEEL FURNITURE

Even more troublesome to refinish than rattan is wicker furniture. If the old finish is badly deteriorated, brush on a heavy-bodied water-rinse paint remover. After the remover has worked for at least half an hour, brush the surface with a mild, bristly brush; then hose off.

When the wicker is dry, rub seat, back, and arm surfaces with a big wad of steel wool. Replace any broken dowels or rope with new pieces of the same size, stained to match others. Apply two coats of varnish or combined varnish-stain. Since wicker is so difficult to refinish properly, take extra good care of it—avoid unnecessary exposure to weather.

Even more difficult to refinish or repair than wicker or rattan, peel furniture should be cared for and protected to prevent the necessity of refinishing. If the surface is rough or flaky, brush it with a stiff bristle (not steel wire) brush. Depending on condition of the peel, you may scrub it with a detergent to remove stains and dirt. Flush with clear water and allow to dry thoroughly. Apply a single coat of spar varnish.

CUSHIONS AND PADS

Vinyl- and cotton-covered cushions for a chair, chaise, or sunbathing cot can be cleaned with whipped, dry detergent suds. Combine detergent and a few tablespoons of water and whip with an eggbeater; then spread on cushions. Scrub lightly with a sponge; then allow to sit for half an hour or more. Remove suds with a putty knife; scrub with sponge. If covers can be unzipped, it is no problem for you to remove them and wash separately.

Tears, rips, and burned holes can be fixed with pieces of matching material cemented to the back side with fabric cement. Sew up ripped seams with a stout cord, and replace tufting buttons from the underside if replacements are not available.

WHERE TO BUY MATERIALS

The best source for replacing seats and backs of canvas or plastic, webbing kits for reweaving plastic seats, replacement cushions, and plastic tubing is one of the big mail-order houses. Zinc-coated screws and bolts, nonrusting tacks are available by mail order too.

Pick up pieces and repairs for rattan, wicker, or peel furniture from a furniture repair shop.

Hunt in marine or boat supply shops for heavy-duty, colorfast, exterior enamels; sun-resistant varnishes; waterproof wood glues; and waterproofing sprays. Boat shops also carry water-rinse paint removers, vinyl repair materials, zinc-coated hardware, stainless steel nails or tacks, exterior canvas paints, and vinyl- or fabric-cleaning aids.

Daylilies

flaring flowers, chaliced cups, and bells. There are 18-inch dwarfs, threefoot-tall intermediates, and five-foot giants. But best of all, along with their new sophistication, daylilies have kept their sturdy peasant qualities. They're as durable and self-reliant as ever. You really can't afford to be without a few plants if you demand low maintenance as well as beauty for your garden.

You can grow daylilies wherever you live. They are immune to heat, will survive the roughest winters. Although they flower in the most trying conditions, they deserve good care. Give them morning sun and afternoon shade, plus well-drained sandy loam, for spectacular, showquality blooms. The vibrantly colored new hybrids prefer a little more shade—their colors fade in full sun.

Your daylily clumps will grow disease-free and need not be disturbed for several years. Then, as the blooms falter from over-crowding of the roots, lift the clump with a spading fork in late summer or early fall and pull smaller sections of three or four stalks from the edge of the clump. At the bottom of each new hole, pile the soil up in a cone shape and plant each division on it, arranging the roots so they have lots of room. Cover with soil to about an inch above the crown of the plant. You can add bonemeal and well-rotted manure or a balanced commercial fertilizer at this time. If the clumps of roots are too thick to pull apart, you can divide them by prying apart with two spading forks placed back to back. Plant dwarf varieties 18 to 24 inches apart, tall types 30 inches apart.

By choosing your varieties carefully, you can have daylilies in bloom from May through September. The old lemon daylily (Hemerocallis flava) blooms in May and June, is quite fragrant. Modern early bloomers are 'Brocade' (amber rose, flowers in the evening), 'Gold Dust' (bronze yellow), and 'Tangerine' (deep orange).

Species for June and July flowers are H. aurantiaca (orange), middendorffi (dark orange), and thunbergi (fragrant, yellow). Modern hybrids for early summer bloom are 'Baronet' (red, flowers evenings), 'Halo' (frilled yellow), 'Sweetbriar' (pink and yellow), and 'Tasmania' (coral and gold).

In July and August, the tawny lily (H. fulva) blooms wild on the East Coast. Its cultivated form is a double bloom named 'Kwanso.' 'Marguerite Fuller,' shown on page 44 is an eight-petaled variation. Other midsummer bloomers are 'Black Prince,' 'Bold Courtier' (red and yellow), 'Primula' (soft yellow), and 'Pink Dream'.

In September, you can have flowers from the following varieties: 'Autumn King' (deep yellow), 'Moonray' (pale yellow, evening bloomer), 'Queen Esther' (bright red), and 'Scarlet Sunset' (red, evenings).

SERVE CURRY ON A CART

Once you've chosen the main dish for your party everything else seems to fall into place. In one fell swoop you've decided on the go-withs, the dessert, the way of serving, and the table setting. For this party we chose a luscious crab curry. For a unique serving idea we put the main course on a cart and moved it from table to table (three small tables for a party of 12). The menu: Bombay Curried Crab, rice, puri (fried unleavened bread), curry condiments, and white wine. Lemon sherbet with curação and coffee were served in another part of the garden. For the table ideas, turn to page 63. For more party entrées, see page 106.

HORS D'OEUVRES CAN MAKE A MEAL

Call them hors d'oeuvres . . . call them finger foods. But the appetizers you usually serve before a meal can be so delicious and so hearty they can be the meal for your party. Your biggest asset here is the hibachi. Assemble all the fixings beforehand and then let your guests cook their own. To round out the meal you might have two rolled beef roasts turning on a spit (see page 69). Cut the beef in thin slices, top with barbecue sauce, and serve on small rolls. Other stars of the show: miniature tamales, vegetable relishes, ice cold beer. For dessert, pineapple and orange slices. For more hors d'oeuvres turn to page 107.

HIBACHI HORS d'OEUVRES

3 large cloves of garlic, crushed
1/4 c. pure vegetable oil
1 c. soy sauce
1 c. sherry or sake
1/4 c. white or rice vinegar
Scallops
Large shrimp in shells
Chicken livers
Thin strips of beef
Small chicken wings

Small chicken drumsticks
Thawed frozen lobster tails, cut crosswise into pieces
Small white onions, halved
Fresh peas
Canned whole beets, drained
Very firm cherry tomatoes
Mushrooms
Thick orange wedges
Green peppers

Combine garlic, oil, soy sauce, sherry or sake and vinegar. Marinate scallops, shrimp, chicken livers, beef strips, chicken wings, chicken drumsticks, and pieces of lobster in mixture at least 2 hours. String on skewers with one vegetable, a selection of them, or with orange wedges.

Brush Hors d'Oeuvres with marinade. Cook over low coals, turning once.

Shrimp—Cook about 3 minuzes on each side or until shrimp turns pink.

Scallops and beef strips—Cook quickly. The best way to time them is by their brownness.

Chicken livers—Cook about 5 minutes on each side.

Chicken—Cook wings and drumsticks about 12 to 15 minutes on each side. Time will vary with their size.

Cioppino is one of San Francisco's longtime specialties—it's a fish and shellfish stew akin to bouillabaisse. There are many legends surrounding its origin. Supposedly it stems from a concoction of the local fishermen of Fisherman's Wharf in San Francisco who made the stew with whatever the day's catch yielded. They cooked it in a large pot on the wharf, asking each fishing vessel for a contribution to the pot with the plea of "chip in, chip in!"

Our version is chock-full of crab, shrimp, clams, and fish and generously laced with wine, vegetables, herbs, and seasonings. Make sure you serve Cioppino with a green salad, garlic bread, and a white wine. Fruit, cheese, and espresso make the perfect ending. For more party soups, see page 108.

Don't have a Pot Roast Dinner. Have a Pranzo di Manzo, instead.

To make the Frutta:
After a meal, Italians eat frutta. Plain fresh fruit. Serve yours with knives for peeling, and cheese alongside.
Any combination will do (apples and Bel Paese is a good one).
For this dessert, it's not what you serve that's Italian, it's the way you serve it.

Bread is pane (pah-nay) in Italian. Buy breadsticks, or a long thin loaf of "Italian Bread." Slice halfway. Then to make it even more Italian, dot with butter, parmesan cheese and a little garlic salt; wrap in foil and warm in the oven.

To make the Pane:

To make the Manzo: Pranzo di Manzo means "dinner of beef," but you don't have to know how to say it to make it. Because Chef Boy-Ar-Dee® makes a spaghetti sauce that's so Italian, it can make a pot roast Italian. Just cook the Chef's savory sauce right into the meat, the way Italians do. Let its special Italian spices and rich tomato goodness add their lively flavor to your roast. That's all it takes to make sure that instead of ordinary pot roast, this will be something special: real Italian Manzo.

3 pounds beef (pot roast cut) 2 tbsp. oil

1/2 tsp. salt 1/4 tsp. pepper 2 tbsp. oil 2 cans Chef Boy-Ar-Dee Spaghetti Sauce with Mushrooms

1. Season meat with salt and pepper. 2. In a large heavy saucepan, brown all sides in oil. Pour off excess oil; pour on Chef Boy-Ar-Dee Spaghetti Sauce with Mushrooms. 3. Cover and cook slowly 2½ hours (or until tender). 4. Serve sliced with extra sauce poured on.

SALADS By the Pool

Everyone, everywhere, loves a delicious salad. Some like them hearty and savory, some like them light and on the sweet side. Why not serve both at your next party? For the hearty ones we show you a zesty Salade Nicoise. The list of ingredients is long and tempting with crisp greens, whole green beans, onions, green peppers, ripe olives, beets, cherry tomatoes, tuna, and anchovies. For the sweet side, make one large, lovely fruit salad, individual salads, or as we have done here, try Fruits in a Glass. Take an assortment of crystal glasses and fill them with a combination of fruits and a special dressing. They'll be a conversation piece and are a wonderful way to show off your salads. With these, serve an assortment of breads, muffins, and pecan rolls. With the Salade Niçoise, serve cheese biscuits and poppy seed rolls. Top off the meal with a luscious coconut cake (see page 109), tinkling iced tea or coffee. For Salade Niçoise and other salads, turn to page 109.

For Fruits in a Glass, first prepare
Lemon Sugar Syrup: Mix 2 cups sugar and 1 cup water in saucepan.
Bring to boiling, stirring until sugar is dissolved.
Boil rapidly 5 minutes. Cool. Chill. Stir in 3 tablespoons of lemon juice. In all recipes below, pour syrup over prepared fruits and chill.

Berry Cheese Cup. Place ½ cup dark, seeded grapes in bottom of glass. Top with 1 cup cottage cheese, mounding it in center. Arrange halved strawberries, cut side out, around mound. Top center with whole, unhulled strawberry.

Papaya Salad. Arrange 3 thick slices of papaya and some sprigs of watercress in glass. Add a dash of lime juice.

Banana with Raspberries. Peel one side of a small banana. Leave other half of skin on for shell. Make diagonal cuts in banana. Arrange in glass with ¾ cup raspberries and a leaf of romaine. Skewer half a crabapple on top of banana.

Three Fruit Salad. Halve, core, and section grapefruit. On each half arrange 10 mandarin orange sections in groups of two.

Separate sections with strawberry slice. Put whole berry in center.

California Salad Cup. Combine 1 cup cantaloupe and honeydew melon balls; 1/4 avocado, sliced; and 1/4 cup blueberries.

You'll get more out of a Philco.

Because you can get more in.

One 21-cubic-foot refrigerator doesn't necessarily give you the same amount of usable space as another 21-cubic-foot refrigerator.

Take the Philco side-by-side shown here as an example. It measures 21 cubic feet, just as a lot of other refrigerators do. But the fact is, it holds more food.

How come? Because like all Philco refrigerators it's designed to make maximum use of all available space.

Shelves are roomy and slide out to help you load the refrigerator with greatest economy of space. They're adjustable, too. You move them up or down to make enough space, but never waste it. Even the deep door shelves are adjustable. You can choose from 98 shelf arrangements in the freezer door alone.

Philco saves space another way, too. Special thin insulation material makes outside dimensions smaller. And biggercapacity refrigerators often fit in the same space a "smaller" one used to fill.

For more convenience and less work, Philco refrigerators like the 21-cubic-foot side-by-side shown here never have to be defrosted. There's "no frost" in the refrigerator side. And "no frost" in the freezer side. In fact, the only place ice ever forms is in the automatic ice maker, where it belongs.

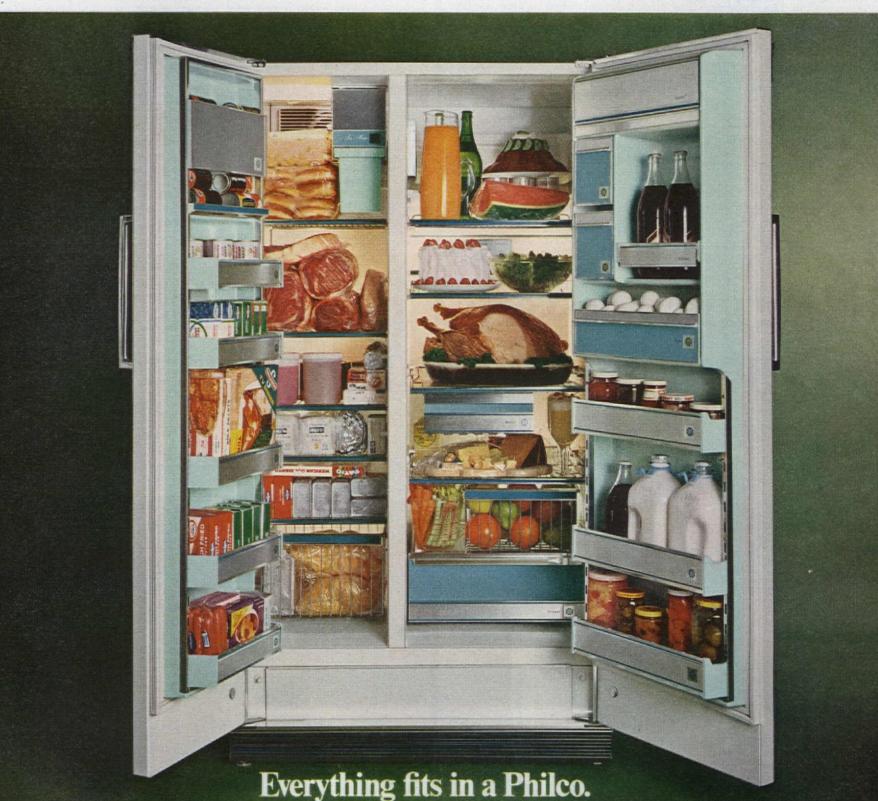

So if you're fed up with trying to cram things into a refrigerator that wastes so much space that it's still half empty when it's "full," just remember, you'll get more out of Philco... because you can get more in.

By ELIZABETH C. ROBINSON

Several years ago when poolside manners were nearly all geared to public or private-club swimming pools, we had specific rules for poolside behavior. Today with a swimming pool within reach of many families, it means that several of your friends and you, yourself, may have a pool in your backyard.

What should you expect from your guests? And what in turn should your responsibilities be to them?

A family down the street from us has a pool. In front of their house stands a flagpole. When a big blueand-white flag flies on the tall pole, the neighborhood children are invited to swim.

Posted at the poolside of this swimming pool is a set of well-defined rules. The children of the neighborhood know and abide by the rules that are simple ones. How many of them are you following at your pool or at the pool where your children are invited to swim?

The rules say: You are our guests. Please obey our rules.

- 1. For children under 10, an adult or older child who swims well must be at the pool when you go in swimming. No one swims alone.
- 2. Swimmers with long hair must wear bathing caps.
- 3. Wash suntan oil from arms, legs, and faces. Oil affects our filter.
- 4. Absolutely no glass bottles of any kind at poolside. This includes suntan lotions.
- 5. Bring your own towel.
- 6. No running by anyone at any time around the pool or near the pool. Walk, walk, walk!
- 7. Fins and other equipment belong in a bigger pool than ours. Please do not bring toys or other equipment with you.
- 8. Please wear shoes or some foot covering to the pool.
- 9. Diving is to be done only from the deep end of the pool. Cooperate with the people who are swimming. Dive only when there is plenty of room.

10. The adult section is under the big yellow umbrella. This is off limits for all youngsters. Ask your parents to come to you if you want something.

Children usually accept authority if they know the reason behind the rules. And there is little or no infringement of these rules at our friends' pool, Anyone who breaks the rules is not expected to return to swim; yet the blue flag flies often and all of the children in the neighborhood go happily to swim, for they appreciate knowing what they can and cannot do.

Parents confide that rules that must be obeyed give children a sense of security. Parents (even those with a fair amount of the "permissiveness doctrine") respond as well when the safety of their children is being protected, also.

In our own pool we do not have posted rules or a sign that says "not responsible for swimmers" but we take every precaution for their safety. We maintain (even with adults) the rule that no one swims unless there is someone on the sidelines.

Running and clowning at a pool are dangerous. A swimming pool is for swimming and if there is horseplay it should not be near a swimming pool. This is a good rule to follow, It may save someone's life someday.

After a small glass bottle of suntan oil was broken near our pool and some of the pieces went into the water, we insist on the no-glass bottle regulation. It is a good safeguard against cuts.

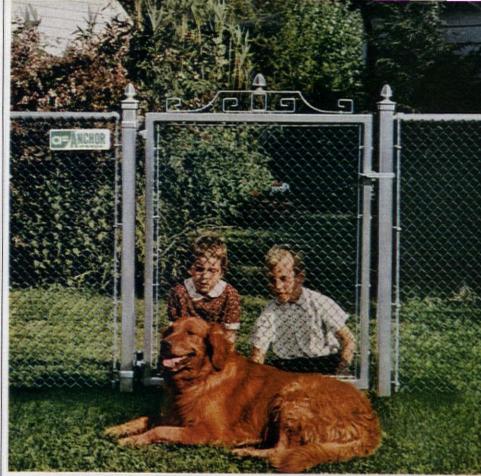

Most swimming-pool rules, whether posted or not, are just plain good manners. A hostess should not have to provide a towel for you after swimming. Yet people with swimming pools are the first to admit that the "I forgot to bring a towel" is the rule that is broken more than any other.

Actually (if you consider it) there is no reason for a child to eat at a friend's swimming pool. If a child brings snacks with him, common decency would certainly show him that it is impolite to eat when others do not have food. While parties around a pool are appropriate for entertaining, children munching is quite another thing.

Some swimming-pool filters are not at all temperamental. Suntan oil will not bother them; neither will it affect the acid content of the water. In other pools suntan oils and other preparations do affect the water and make it more difficult to filter the pool if many people have been swimming. It is wiser in this case to suggest that no suntan oil be used before swimming. If oils are used, then a shower should be taken before entering the pool. In any case, ask your hostess before you apply suntan oil; it is the polite thing to do.

Swimming caps may not be a problem with your pool. With ours it does not make any difference, and we do not enforce the rule. However, if you have a great many children with long hair it may be necessary to establish a cap-wearing rule.

We agree in our family that adults deserve a private part of the poolside where wet children cannot come. You may not agree. I suggest that the first time you go swimming at a friend's pool you ask to be briefed on the "house rules." He will appreciate your courtesy. After all, there is no better place to practice politeness than around a swimming pool.

CAREFREE VACATION in the ARKANSAS OZARKS

We invite you to be OUR GUESTS on a visit to Horseshoe Bend Estates in the beautiful Ozark Mountains of Arkansas. We are located in a section of America that is being re-discovered . . . an area where vestiges of a romantic past are intertwined harmoniously with realities of the present and promises of the future. This is pioneer land . . . a scenic land of gently-rolling tree-covered foothills and green valleys dotted with clear sparkling lakes and streams . . a place that's ideal for year-round relaxed living.

It is a resort area that has retained the natural beauty that was here when Cherokee and Caddo Indian tribes hunted in its forests and fished its lakes and rivers. It is a vacation area where friendly down-to-earth people, many of them direct descendants of sturdy pioneer stock, continue to live close to nature. It is an area free from smog and dirt and grime . . . a land where the pace of living is leisurely . . . where one can maintain a tremendously satisfying standard of living on an income well below the nation's norm.

Golfers can improve their swing on our driving range or challenge their youngster to a round of miniature golf on a nifty course. Archers may shoot regulation targets or wander through forests taking pot-shots at stumps, old nests, trees and bush clumps. GLOSSARY OF FABRIC TRIMMINGS

Want to perk up your home without attempting a colossal redecorating job? Try trimmings. They are easy to work with and are generally inexpensive considering how effective they are. Use them to give curtains a custom-made look, to add architectural detail to a plain wall, or to make an ordinary pillow more colorful. There are lots of trimmings available. Most are found in department, fabric, notion, or decorating stores.

WHEN BUYING TRIMMINGS

Most trimmings are made of either cotton, rayon, or silk—usually the most expensive choice of all. A cotton trimming should be used on a washable fabric since cotton may fade or run if dry cleaned. An exception would be white cotton trimming, but remember that white cottons usually come out whiter with washing. Even though cotton trimming is considered washable, allow for some shrinkage.

When sewing it to the fabric, hold the fabric taut and ease the trimming in loosely. Or preshrink the trimming. This can be done by steaming the trimming over the spout of a boiling teakettle or by machine washing and drying it.

Rayon trimming should be dry cleaned unless it is marked vat-dyed. Since silk trimmings are most often custom made, we will not discuss them at length.

WHAT GOES WITH WHAT

Use lightweight trimmings on lightweight fabrics and heavy ones on heavier fabrics that can carry the added weight. How you combine patterns of fabrics and trimmings is especially important.

Highly patterned or intricately woven trimming should be used on plain or textured fabrics, or fabric with patterns that are much larger or much smaller in scale than the pattern of the trimming. Also, consider the width of the trimming in relation to the pattern of the fabric. The color of the trimming and how it contrasts with the fabric will also affect the overall look.

The overall proportion of the trimming to the area where you plan to use it is important too. If, for instance, you are using a wide braid to outline a window frame, be sure that the width of the braid corresponds to the overall size of the window. A large window needs wide trimming, and a small one narrow trimming. If you are using narrow trimming, two or three rows may be more effective than one.

Be sure when selecting your fabric and trimming that they are compatible. A cotton trimming looks better on simpler fabrics—plain weaves, cotton prints—whether formal or informal in design. A glossy rayon trimming requires a formal fabric—damask, brocade, velvet, or a shiny-surface cotton.

BRAIDS

Braid is a flat tape or ribbon with woven edges. It comes in many widths, colors, and designs and is readily adaptable for use on draperies, upholstery, or any flat surface.

Cimp is a type of braid designed to cover upholstery nails. Because it is narrow and flexible it can be used to make curving designs on tablecloths, valances, etc.

Galloon is a braid similar to gimp but generally wider, flat, and closely woven—often in metallic weaves.

Jute border is a braid made of jute yarn, usually combined with cotton, that looks like burlap. Especially popular is an open-weave border of natural-color jute. It is also often embroidered in hot Mexican colors.

Carpet tape is a flat herringboneweave cotton tape used commercially to bind carpets. But it's available in stores for use as a trimming. Cotton carpet tape will shrink a great deal, so your best bet may be the more practical, vat-dyed rayon version washable and in many colors.

FRINGES

Bouclé trim is a fringe or braid made of rayon yarn spun into a crimpled effect. It's often used as an edging for draperies.

Loop ball fringe is a flat heading hung with alternating loops and pompons. A larger version of the same fringe is called swag ball fringe.

Rattail fringe is a formal edging in a loop or garland effect.

Space-dyed fringe is a multicolored spun rayon fringe woven from yarn that has been dyed two or more colors. This is quite modern looking.

Moss is a short, thick fringe with a narrow, tailored heading. Made in cotton and spun rayon—both are washable.

MISCELLANEOUS

Pompons strung on glass-fiber cord can be sewn to fabrics or hung vertically from a rod, like beads. They should be machine dried after washing to restore fluffiness.

Tieback is a cord arranged in a double loop with tassels or pompons, used to hold draperies pulled back to the window frame.

Chair tie is a cord with a tassel at each end, used to tie a seat cushion to a chair—especially appropriate with Provincial furniture. If you can't find the chair tie you want, try converting a tieback. The selection of tiebacks is usually larger and by untying the knot you can easily make a chair tie.

DECORATE WITH PAINT

Paint has taken on new color. No longer is the emphasis on playing it safe by picking colors that will be lastingly pleasant. Today, the accent's on boldness and experimentation. Everything, including the kitchen sink, has taken on new drama.

So be daring. Have a fling with color and make yesterday's room dazzling. Choose color—light or dark—that has a character its very own. And don't worry about making a mistake. Paint is the least expensive of all wall coverings and the easiest to do over. The newest paints go on smoothly, are quick drying, and often cover in just one coat.

Following are some ideas to help you get started.

FURNISHING A ROOM WITH PAINT

Did you know that color can furnish? Suppose you're long on space, short on furniture. Resort to whopping doses of color: walls one brilliant shade, the floor another, doors a third. For example: chalk-white walls, emerald floor, canary doors; or skyblue walls with a tomato floor and navy doors. In cover artist Giorgio Giusti's house in Mendam, New Jersey, we saw another striking contrast that fills up space visually and makes you forget about the lack of furniture. The upstairs hall is all white with each bedroom door painted a different color.

Dark walls are another space filler. The "in" thing with dark walls is to paint them shiny. So far as we know, shiny, dark walls are the brainchild of talented London designer David Hicks who likes them hung with huge, abstract canvases, (Unframed art posters will do if oils are beyond your budget.) Sure, there's a bit of a glare problem, but then there's glare with wetlook vinyls too, and nobody's bothered. Word of warning: light, shiny walls won't do. Unless you choose a really dark paint such as licorice, chocolate, eggplant, or navy, your room may end up looking institutional. If four glistening, dark walls are too much for you, start with one, preferably the one wall of your room that isn't opposite a window, or the wall behind your bed.

Walls painted dark—shiny or flat—will make your room look smaller and more intimate than light walls. But don't forget you'll need more light at night and plenty of light colors in furnishings and accessories or the overall effect will be gloomy.

SQUARE A ROOM WITH PAINT

To shorten a long room paint the end walls dark. Or divide the long side walls into thirds, equal or unequal, and paint the center third a contrasting color. For example, end walls and adjoining thirds of long walls could be olive with the middle third of the long wall done in mauve. (For neat edges, use tape.)

PAINT A PATTERN

Patterns don't only come in rolls; they also come out of paint cans. Designer Richard Henderson lightly penciled a two-foot grid on a white wall in his apartment, sketched in Matisselike blossoms, and filled in the background "square by square" with apple green paint. The result was a bright green wall patterned with white (see our March, 1967 issue, page 69).

Stencils are still another way to individuality with paint. Or if you have the patience and time, use tape to make a wall pattern. (Paint between the taped lines.)

Still easier, but just as effective, is to paint alternate kitchen cabinet doors (if they're flush) or louvered shutters in a color like lemon, fire engine, or royal. Leaving every other door white will create a checkerboard effect.

Have you got a backless bookcase? Paint the wall behind it a zippy color; or if you have several bookcases use several colors for a striped pattern.

CEILINGS GOT YOU DOWN?

In old houses, ceilings can be a problem. If yours have pipes running along them, play them up by painting each pipe a different, bright color.

At Scarabaeus, George Beylerian's madly mod New York boutique, the curlicued plaster ceiling of an upstairs showroom was "picked out" (certain lines emphasized) in bright pink, Bristol blue, and red. Try this if you have an old stamped-tin ceiling, but stick to one color only. Otherwise it may be overpowering. When "picking out" in color, apply this paint technique to any architectural trim if you want it to look more obvious.

PAINT IT OUT

So far, all our paint ideas are for drawing and holding the attention. But paint can, and sometimes should, be used for the opposite effect . . . to enlarge a room or an entire house.

If the walls are crowding in on you, paint them with light colors. In choosing these paint colors watch out—pale shouldn't mean washed out. Even the palest primrose, the softest green, the most delicate pink, can have character. You can also create an illusion of space in a small house by sticking to one paint-color scheme.

Low ceilings oppress you? Give them a lift with a coat of white or light paint—lighter than your wall color. In a white room a pale sky blue ceiling is a great space maker.

Fade out eyesores like radiators, overly ornate moldings, too many doors, by painting them the wall color

These are only some of the ways you can make paint work like magic. Once you start painting, we know you'll come up with your own ideas . . . and being yourself is the most important guideline.

arrived city youngster. But gradually, as he stood by watching the little Negro play with other neighborhood children, the local boy's prejudices began to give way. Finally, he remarked with surprise: "Why he plays just like me."

But the greatest benefit by far is the affection that develops between the child and his hosts. A Vermont newspaper reporter who took in a youngster from the Bronx last summer somehow said it best when, at the very end of an article describing what the boy's visit had meant, he wrote: "And we learned that when Willie finally does have to leave Wednesday, we will miss him." Come fall of this year, 17,000 other American families will be saying the same thing.

The pleasure of buying a vacation house varies inversely with the length of time between the impulse to buy and the ability to move in. In other words, a family that wants a vacation house wants it fast. Various sectors of the building industry have attacked this problem. Some offer inexpensive plans of easily built houses. Others arrange financing assistance. And a most promising solution, many firms offer packaged or prefabricated homes.

On this page, you see the highest development so far of the prefab concept—a fully preassembled vacation house. Essentially it's a mobile home with detachable wheels that can be placed on a permanent foundation. A family can move in the same day it arrives at the site. COMING IN Summer

Summer is all but upon us and next month we show you how to make it the most pleasant one in many a dog day.

Quick breezy ideas to spruce up your house . . . how to plan a cool summer garden . . . a fabulous swimming pool

And something extra special . . . you'll meet Jacques Jaffry, our new chef who has just joined American Home's food staff. Jacques will be creating exciting new dishes each month along with how-tos on the basic steps in fine cooking. See you in Summer!

Most of us seem to enjoy the gastronomic pleasures of life. At best we always seem to be nibbling at something unless, of course, we are one of those who count calories and cheat only occasionally.

It occurs to me as I consider what we eat each day, that a set of standards for good food is important. How else is it possible to know the difference between what is really good and what is substandard. A frustrating experience in a restaurant recently made me realize the need to be aware of good standards for fine food.

When my order arrived it was not to be believed. All it should not have been it was. It was overcooked and burned. Firmly, but respectfully, I returned the food, saying I had lost my appetite. And I had! I finally relented, however, as the hostess begged for "another chance." Would you believe the second was worse than the first?

Now to the moral of the storywhy were so many other people eating the same thing and not complaining about it? Can one be overly critical and expect too much? (What was the order? A simple country platter of baked ham and eggs, over light.) Could it be that we have become so blasé as not to care, or is it that we simply expect that restaurants will serve poor food and have resigned ourselves to the fact? So we compromise our personal standards of quality to avoid unpleasantness. Is it that we are not so aware as we should be of what is good, mediocre, and poor food?

How can one know the difference? Well, that's a difficult question to tackle because everyone's taste varies. And there's always the fact that some like food overcooked or undercooked, some like it warm, some hot, others highly spiced, others bland! There are built-in standards though, and that's what recipes are for. A good one, followed exactly, should give you perfect results—experiment and taste-test. Develop your own standards as you experience new pleasures. Know the difference between underdone, overdone, and "just right," learn the subtleties of flavor, and above all—expose yourself to good food. Don't hesitate to return a poor dish in a restaurant. After all, eating is one of life's most consistent pleasures!

Which reminds me of another pleasure which lack of time often cheats us of ... reading. I try to catch up on my reading when I travel. In my travels across the country, I stay in many and sundry hotels and motels and I admit I have the urge to rearrange the furniture every time I enter a bedroom. Some are very, very modern with only a bench for a chair, some are very elegant with traditions of the past and some are perfect examples of decadent elegance, but they all have one thing in common. Poor lighting! I was thrilled to find out about a new miniature travel lamp by Tensor. It folds to just 2 by 2½ by 6 inches and has a flexible arm that extends to 10 inches in length, I should think this would be a practical travel companion.

We have been experimenting at home with a perfectly delightful entrée that has masculine overtones. Men love it and actually the ladies do too. It's Entrecote Butterfly. You simply take two strip steaks about 1/2 inch thick and make a pocket for stuffing in each one. Slit steaks very carefully along one side, coming not quite to the edge, and working the knife through almost to the opposite side. Make a mixture of a half pound of ground beef (we like to grind our own top sirloin, or you could even use round steak; we grind it twice), 2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley, 2 tablespoons chopped shallots or green onions, cracked black pepper, and salt to taste. Divide the mixture and stuff each steak evenly. Press the cut sides firmly together.

Brown on both sides very quickly in a skillet over high heat in about 2 tablespoons butter. Reduce heat to medium, Keep turning until you achieve the doneness you prefer. Remember that the stuffing needs to be heated through and from there you determine how much longer you wish to cook it for rare, medium, or well done. Remove the steaks to a heated platter and deglaze the pan. Pour in a little dry red wine (about ¼ cup), let it simmer for about two minutes, keeping the heat low so that the sauce does not evaporate. (This doesn't make much sauce, just enough to glaze the steak.) Pour the sauce over the steak and serve!

For two hearty appetites two strip steaks are a must, though I must warn you it is a lot. Actually, if you divide each steak it will make 4 small servings.

We like to buy two (approximately 21/2 pounds) porterhouse steaks on special for about 89c to 99c a pound. We trim them and cut the strip portions and the loin away from the bone, then grind the tails for stuffing. Even if you don't have as much stuffing as the recipe calls for, it really doesn't matter; just season accordingly. From two porterhouse steaks you can get 6 small Entrecote Butterfly by cutting the strips in half and using the two loin portions. You'll have to increase the wine to about 3/8 to 1/2 cup for more steaks. Serve with crisp julienne potatoes and fresh asparagus for a great meal.

Mom at 227 pounds. I used to wish she was slim, but never said so because I didn't want to burt her.

Mom at 130, wearing a size 12 dress. Some come down from 22½! Doesn't she look great?

Here I am-Mrs. Larry Lefebvre. If Mom hadn't become weight conscious, maybe I'd still be fat and single.

My mother lost 97 pounds and changed my life.

By Edith Henderson's daughter, Georgia-as told to Ruth McCarthy was the bride. But at the wedding all eyes were on my mother, Edith Henderson, the woman everybody's been reading about. She went from 227 pounds to 130 pounds—and, quite frankly, changed my whole life.

I was about eleven when I realized Mom was fat. I never mentioned it, because I didn't want to hurt her. But it really took away from her looks. My girl friend's mother was so slim and looked so nice in clothes, I couldn't help comparing them.

When I think of it, I had no right criticizing her, even silently. I looked like a barrel myself. Why, in eighth grade, I wore size 14 slacks. Maybe that's why I never took much interest in clothes. And neither did my mother. She wore a size $22\frac{1}{2}$ dress.

Living on a farm, Mom and I both had plenty of exercise, doing chores. But all that did was make us eat more. My father is a baker. For a while, my mother worked in the pastry shop, and nibbled whenever she felt like it. I did all right on that score, too. On my way home from school, I'd buy candy or a bag of potato chips. That's when I wasn't playing football or fishing with the boys. When I finally got home for supper, Mom would have heaps of meat and potatoes, smothered in gravy. Sometimes macaroni and cheese or spaghetti. And, of course, pastry. Homemade prune kolachy, or her favorite—chocolate layer cake.

Occasionally, my mother would go on a drastic diet. Once, she tried a reducing drug. Another time, grapefruit and eggs. I hated those times, because she was so grouply.

Finally, Mom hit 227 pounds. To reduce, she Advertisement knew she needed help. It was then she turned to a vitamin and mineral reducing-plan candy to curb her appetite. She'd read about movie stars using it. And our local druggist thought it'd help her.

My only concern was whether it'd make her irritable. It didn't. And you can ask any of the ladies in my mother's Chub Club. You see, a lot of my mother's friends were stout, so they formed this club. Some took reducing drugs, others tried liquid-diet drinks, and some used will power alone. Mom was the only one who took Ayds, the reducing-plan candy. And she was the only one who lost a lot of weight. Ninety-seven pounds!

If you're wondering what you do on the Ayds Plan, I can tell you because I've used Ayds myself. The candy contains no drugs or anything to make you nervous. You just follow directions—take a vanilla-caramel or a chocolate fudge-type Ayds before meals, with a hot drink. Fifteen minutes later, you're able to eat what the rest of the family eats. Only you eat less, because Ayds automatically reduces your desire for food.

For me, Ayds was also a terrific help as a betweenmeal snack. When I was at Vocational School, I'd carry some with me. Or when I'd come home hungry, I'd have an Ayds, with coffee, instead of cake.

The result was it actually helped change me from a fat tomboy to the girl I am today. Just as losing 97 pounds made a tremendous difference in my mother's appearance. She began to wear lipstick and do her hair more attractively and we both became real clothes conscious.

Why, with a beautiful "new" mother and a new slim look for myself, I developed a certain pride and confidence that I'd never had before. And I suddenly found out what it was like to be attractive to boys. As a matter of fact, shortly after I'd lost weight, I gained a husband. I'm now Mrs. Larry Lefebvre, of Seattle, Washington.

For my wedding, I was down to 120 pounds, size 9 dresses. My mother was still able to wear size 12. I can't tell you how proud I was of her. My husband never knew Mom when she was at her heaviest. But he's seen pictures of her and teases me constantly about not letting my appetite run away with my figure. I don't think it ever will—again.

When my mother discovered Ayds, it not only changed her life, but mine, too. Who knows? If it hadn't been for those little vitamin and mineral reducing-plan candies, maybe I wouldn't be married today.
