The President's Message

THIS number of THE OCTAGON contains the Annuary for 1940. The document is so voluminous that it crowds out other matter, but the publication of the roster from time to time is essential and should be done every year if there were funds on hand to do it. Nor would it have been undertaken at the present time, except that an up-to-date membership list has become necessary in connection with the defense work.

You will find this Annuary a useful document, for it gives you not only the usual list of members alphabetically and by chapters, but also a complete list of the officers and directors; of the committees and their duties and memberships; of the fellows, members emeriti, life members, honorary members, honorary corresponding members, medalists, and past officers; of the chapters and state association members and their officers, and other pertinent reference data.

With the publication of this document, every member will have had issued to him this year a current copy of each of the essential documents of The Institute.

There is little change, so far as I am aware, in the situation with respect to participation of architects in the National Defense Program. The Quartermaster General's Office has awarded several contracts for professional services to architects in connection with its cantonments and replacement centers. For some of these it has selected engineers instead of architects, for others it has contracted for joint professional services or has required a collaborative service. For still others the Office has furnished the professional services.

The construction projects referred to are on continental America. The new defense bases that are to be constructed on the British islands off the eastern continental coast are huge projects and I understand that on at least four of them there will be joint contracts for professional services in which the architects will be the coordinating authorities.

The Public Buildings Administration is proceeding to design the housing projects allocated to it by the Army and the Navy and at least two contracts have been awarded for construction of such Army projects, based on the administration plans. There is yet no indication that architects in private practice will participate in the work assigned to Public Buildings Administration.

The first allocation of housing projects to be built under the $150,000,000 defense housing act is just announced, although a month has passed since the act was rushed through Congress and signed by the President. The Federal Works Administrator has not announced whether he has selected the Public Buildings Administration to plan all these projects, or whether he will allocate a part of them to other agencies.

The allocations made, including 6,750 housing units to eleven defense centers, are as follows:

Jacksonville, Fla. . . . .	300	Boston, Mass. . . . .	1,050
Pensacola, Fla. . . . .	100	Vallejo, Calif. . . . .	950
Charleston, S. C. . . . .	600	Bremerton, Wash. . . . .	800
Philadelphia, Pa. } . . . .	1,000	Island Oahu, Hawaii . . . .	1,000
Camden, N. J. } . . . .		Indianhead, Md. . . . .	650
New London, Conn. . . . .	300
		Total units . . . . .	6,750

Clark Foreman, formerly director of the power division in the Public Works Administration, has been named special assistant to Federal Works Administrator, John M. Carmody, to handle defense housing matters for him.

Charles F. Palmer, Housing Coordinator of The National Defense Commission, has appointed two consultants to assist him in developing housing for defense workers by means of private capital: Philip Norton, a realtor of Los Angeles, who will advise concerning the housing within the territory west of the Mississippi, and Morton Bodfish of Chicago, Vice President of the United States Savings and Loan League.

I think you will be interested in reading the release made by the National Defense Advisory Commission on November 20, relating to the progress of the National Defense Construction Program. I quote the release in full and have commented on one paragraph. The comment is in italicized text immediately following the paragraph.

"An analysis of the $2 billion defense construction program was issued today by the National Defense Advisory Commission as the first of a series of analyses of the expanded defense program now under way.

"This analysis shows that present legislation calls for Federal expenditures of approximately $2 billion for defense construction of various kinds through June 30, 1942. More than $1 billion of this work is under way, providing troop quarters, air and naval stations, plant facilities for manufacturing airplanes, tanks, ammunition, and other military supplies, and facilities for the construction of ships, etc.

"The largest single classification under the construction program is the building of shelters for trainees, at a total cost of $631 million. This includes shelter for the National Guard, the expanded regular Army, increased quarters for Navy personnel, as well as trainees under the Selective Service Program. These buildings will be largely of wooden construction, a majority of which will be completed within the next few months.

"The second largest classification is $520 million for construction of 'productive facilities.' Under this classification are airplane and engine plants, armor, tank, ammunition and loading plants, ship-ways and ship-yard facilities.

"In addition, there are large plant expansions and new plant construction financed entirely with private funds. It is estimated that total private factory construction will be $330 million for this year, and may increase to $500 million in 1941.

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has authorized loans of $175 million to private industry for defense construction (or for construction and equipment when the two are not separable). About $154 million of this total of loan authorizations has been made with firms producing aircraft and related products.

"The third classification is $337 million for air bases. This includes hangars, shops, administration buildings, and utilities at Army and Navy air bases. This construction will be spread over a longer period than the building of shelters for trainees.

"The fourth classification calls for the expenditure of $258 million under 'other military construction.' This expenditure includes sea-coast defenses, and construction at military and naval stations other than air bases.

"The fifth classification under the breakdown shows $240 million, including land cost, is available for defense housing. This is expected to provide 65,000 of the 70,000 dwelling units* necessary for defense workers and families of enlisted men. Practically $100 million appropriated to the Army and Navy for defense housing has been allocated and construction is under way on thousands of units.

"Further, preliminary planning and design studies are under way for construction of the remaining $140 million of housing for defense workers, the bulk of the actual work to be done during 1941."

This is the first public announcement that the designing of housing projects under the $150,000,000 Act is actually under way. The month and more of advance designing will give the agency opportunity to announce how promptly and quickly it has been able to produce plans and specifications after it has been directed to do so and the projects have been assigned to it.

"In addition to the defense construction program covered by direct appropriations or contract authorizations, there are other Government financed construction activities related to defense. The Civil Aeronautics Authority has $40 million for civil airports which contribute to the total air facilities of the country. The WPA has been spending a similar sum annually for work on airports and airways. The extra set of locks for the Panama Canal are part of the total picture but have little immediate effect on construction totals."

This month will probably see the greater part of the defense construction work allocated and under way. I will review the situation in my November message and outline a program for the future which will be offered to The Board for its consideration at its semi-annual meeting in December.

EDWIN BERGSTROM

*This is about one-third of the total housing estimated to be necessary. See my August message.

STANDARDS OF PRACTICE
THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS

THE VIRTUES OF AN ARCHITECT

By Vitruvius

MAY THE ARCHITECT BE HIGH MINDED; NOT ARROGANT BUT FAITHFUL, JUST, AND EASY TO DEAL WITH; WITHOUT AVARICE. LET HIM BE NOT MERCENARY, NOR LET HIS MIND BE OCCUPIED IN RECEIVING GIFTS; BUT LET HIM PRESERVE HIS GOOD NAME WITH DIGNITY.

The quotation is from Marcus Vitruvius, Architect in the reign of Augustus Caesar. It expresses the code of ethics of reputable architects for the past two thousand years. Translation by W. M. Kendall, New York Chapter, American Institute of Architects.

THE DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF MEMBERS OF

PART I

1. The profession of architecture is an old and honorable profession and its successful practice requires imagination, sound judgment, a long training in the art of design and the science of construction and related matters, ability to apply them practically and economically, and scrupulous integrity. Its practitioners should command the confidence and respect of their fellow practitioners, of their clients and all who contribute to the building operations, and of the communities in which they reside and practice.

2. The profession is one of the factors of the building industry and for its livelihood depends on those who build; but of all factors of the industry it is unique in that it does not obtain its livelihood from the sale of labor or materials of construction but from fees for rendering professional services. Such services are personal services, founded on mutual trust between those who render them and those for whom they are rendered and on the principle that the best interest of those to whom the services are rendered is paramount.

3. Advice and counsel constitute the services of the profession. Given in verbal, written, or graphic form, they are normally rendered in order that buildings with their equipment and the areas about them, in addition to being well suited to their purposes, well planned for health, safety, and efficient operation and economical maintenance, and soundly constructed of materials and by methods most appropriate and economical for their particular uses, shall have a beauty and distinction that lift them above the commonplace.

4. It is the purpose of the profession of architecture to render such services from the beginning to the completion of a project.

5. The fulfillment of that purpose is forwarded or retarded every time an architect performs an architectural service. If he renders the highest quality of service he is capable of giving, he enhances the importance and usefulness of the profession; if he fails to do so, he depreciates them and discredits the purposes of the profession. Particularly should his drawings, specifications, and other documents be complete, definite and clear concerning his intentions, the scope of the contractors' work, the materials and methods of construction to be used therefor, and the conditions under which the construction work is to be completed and paid for.

6. Architects should unite in fellowship with the other members of the profession in their professional organizations and do their full share of the work of those organizations. They should accept mentorship of the young men who are entering the profession, leading them to a full understanding of the functions, duties, and responsibilities of architects. They should inspire the loyal interest of their employees, providing suitable working conditions for them, requiring them to render competent and efficient services, and paying them adequate and just compensation therefor. They should seek opportunities to be of constructive service in civic affairs and to the best of their abilities advance the safety, health, and well-being of the community in which they reside, by promoting therein the appreciation of good design, the value of good construction, and the proper placement of structures and the adequate development and adornment of the areas about them.

7. Every architect should, as a member of that profession, do his full part to forward the objectives and maintain the dignity and solidarity of his profession. It is incumbent on him in the conduct of his practice not only to maintain a wholly professional attitude towards those he serves, towards those who assist him in his practice and in giving form to his conceptions, towards his fellow architects, and towards the members of other professions and the practitioners of other arts, but also to respect punctiliously the hall-marks that distinguish professional practice from non-professional enterprise.

8. The hall-marks of a profession can not be particularized in any document but certain procedures by an architect would be distinctly inimical to the profession of architecture, such as:

(a) Offering his services on any basis other than that of competence and experience;

(b) Supplanting or attempting to supplant another architect after definite steps have been taken by a client toward employing the other architect;

(c) Engaging in the business of construction contracting during his practice as an architect;

(d) Investing in any enterprise or having any business relations or personal interests that may tend to discredit his freedom to act impartially and independently in the best interests of those who depend on his judgment and acts;

(e) Making knowingly any deceptive statement to a client of the probable cost of his building project or of the time of its completion;

(f) Making any guarantee of the cost or the time of completion of any project or of the performance of any construction contract;

(g) Accepting or taking compensation, fees, or other valuable considerations in connection with his practice from others than his clients;

(h) Giving prejudiced advice, making unjust decisions or unwarranted interpretation of documents prepared by him, or failing to guard the interests of all engaged in the construction work, that full value under the contracts shall be given and received;

(i) Permitting the publishing of obtrusive or ostentatious advertising of his practice or achievements;

(j) Maliciously injuring the professional reputation, prospects or practice of a fellow architect;

(k) Taking part in any architectural competition any condition of which The Institute deems contrary to the best interests of the public, the profession, or of any of those directly concerned;

(l) Committing any act detrimental to the best interests of the profession.

PART II

THE SELECTION OF AN ARCHITECT

1. The architect's relationship with his client will be satisfactory only if it is based on mutual trust, respect, and integrity.

SELECTING AN ARCHITECT BY DIRECT SELECTION

2. The simplest and quickest way of engaging an architect is by direct selection. Thereunder the prospective client engages his architect directly in a written agreement for an agreed fee as soon as he is satisfied as to the architect's good standing in his profession and community, his ability in design and competence in construction, and his practical efficiency, business capacity and good judgment.

SELECTING AN ARCHITECT BY AN ARCHITECTURAL COMPETITION

3. An architectural competition is established whenever two or more architects make available to a prospective client, or anyone acting in his behalf, any research on his project or conclusion based thereon or any drawing, model or sketch of any nature or any reproduction or copy thereof made for the project.

4. Sometimes, because of the exigencies of laws or other reasons, the prospective client cannot, or does not, desire to select his architect directly. In that event, he may use an architectural competition, but if he uses that method then he does not make the selection himself but delegates it to a competition jury and agrees to employ the architect whom the jury designates the winner of the competition. The jury, however, cannot consider whether or not the architect selected will be personally agreeable to the client nor take into consideration whether or not the architect's professional experience will be satisfactory to him, so the client should assure himself on these points either by limiting the competition to architects of whose compatibility and professional qualifications he has assured himself or by making it a condition of the competition that any competitor who does not so qualify may or shall associate himself with an architect who does.

5. Such a competition should be conducted under conditions that will attract architects of ability, be equitable to all concerned, provide a competent, fair and impartial judgment, and bring out the best results for the client. To accomplish these things, it is essential that the competition embrace a professional adviser to advise the client and conduct the procedure of the competition; a written program of the competition, constituting a contract between the client and the competitors; anonymity of submission; a judgment by an expert and unprejudiced jury; and, if the competition is for a definite project on a definite site and unless barred from doing so by law or legal restraint, an agreement to employ the winner of the competition as the architect of the project to perform the architectural services described and to pay him the fee stated in the program.

6. The essentials stated above must be set out in the program of the competition and all conditions of the competition must be equitable to all concerned before members of The American Institute of Architects enter it. To assure that such is the case, The Institute will scrutinize the programs of architectural competitions that are to be held within its domain and come to its knowledge and will approve such thereof as it finds worthy and in compliance with the prescribed conditions. As soon as, but not before, such approval is given to a competition program members of The Institute may take part in the competition in any capacity, if invited.

PART III

THE ARCHITECT'S SERVICES, FEES, AND CONTRACTS

A—THE ARCHITECT'S SERVICES

NORMAL ARCHITECTURAL SERVICES

1. The architectural services described below are those normally rendered by architects on building projects and contemplated to be performed under the forms of contract published by The Institute. The services vary in detail according to the type, character, extent, and location of the project but none of them can be omitted or lessened without detriment to the project. They are performed in sequence as the project develops, generally in four main stages: the Preliminary Stage, the Basic Drawing Stage, the Working Drawing Stage, and the Construction Stage.

THE PRELIMINARY STAGE

2. During the Preliminary Stage, the client should outline to the architect his ideas of the project and discuss with him its purposes, its general plan and design, its feasibility, location, environs, general type of construction and equipment, the time necessary to build it, its probable useful life and cost, and the means of financing it.

3. When the minds of the architect and his client have met on these essential matters, the architect writes them into a memorandum called the Program of the project, for the acceptance of his client. When the client accepts the program, the architect's Preliminary Stage Services are completed.

THE BASIC DRAWING STAGE

4. Based on the accepted program, the architect makes his general studies of the project, to determine the plan and design and the relevant data he will recommend to his client. He investigates various possibilities of design, placement on site, materials, methods of construction and equipment, familiarizes himself with efficient methods of operating the project for its purposes, and examines laws and ordinances and rules and regulations of governmental authorities and of insurance carriers for their effect.

5. When his studies have progressed to the point that warrant it, the architect makes the Basic Drawings. These are at small scale, sufficient to illustrate his conclusions and clearly fix the general plan and design in all essentials. He then prepares Recommendations to supplement the drawings, calling attention to the significance of the elements of the design, describing the general type of construction, material and equipment he recommends for it, setting out an estimate of the time it should take to do the construction work properly under normal conditions and an estimate of the probable cost of the project, based on such basic drawings and recommendations and the then current prices of labor and materials.

6. The architect should submit the basic drawings and recommendations to his client for study and approval and reach an agreement with him on all essential elements. He should not begin his services of the Working Drawing Stage until that agreement has been reached and the client has approved the basic drawings and recommendations.

When the client approves the basic drawings and recommendations, the architect's Basic Drawing Stage Services are completed.

THE WORKING DRAWING STAGE

7. During the Working Drawing Stage the architect develops the working drawings, specifications, general conditions and bid forms. These technical instruments are the tangible expressions of the architect's ideas from which the cost of the project can be established and the building constructed.

When the working drawings and specifications are in shape for the construction work or, with the bid forms, for taking bids for the work, as the case may be, the services of the Working Drawing Stage are completed.

8. Working Drawings should be logical developments of the approved basic drawings and the Specifications logical developments of the approved recommendations as further study indicates improvements therein, and they should not vary essentially therefrom except by consent of the client. The working drawings should include all essential architectural and engineering drawings, all essential drawings and lists of surface treatments and coverings, sculptures, and improvements of the site areas, and all essential scale details. Generally, they should show plans, elevations and sections of the structures and details of the work and indicate the various materials and where and how they are to be used whereas the Specifications should describe the types and qualities of the materials and finish and the general manner of their construction, assemblage and erection. The two documents should complement and supplement each other.

9. The General Conditions are supplementary to both working drawings and specifications and should set out the conditions under which the work described should be done.

10. The Bid Forms are prepared by the architect for use by bidders. The architect advises his client concerning the qualifications of those who are to be invited to bid and issues the notices and bid forms to those invited. Unless laws otherwise require, he receives the bids, sealed, for his client and advises him concerning the acceptance thereof.

Such bid services will be performed in the interim between the Working Drawing Stage and the Construction Stage as a part of the Normal Architectural Services.

11. Blue Prints and Specifications. The architect's drawings and specifications for a project are his instruments of service and as such are and remain his property at all times. As a part of his Normal Architectural Services he should furnish one copy of each drawing and specification to his client. All other copies for bidders, construction purposes, permits, records, or other purposes are loaned and the cost of making and delivering such copies should be paid by the client as a construction expense.

THE CONSTRUCTION STAGE

12. The Construction Stage is the period during which the work designed and specified or purchased for the client by the architect is fabricated and erected or installed, and the services performed by the architect during that stage are many. The principal ones are outlined below.

13. Construction Contracts. When a contractor's bid is accepted by the client, the architect prepares the terms, conditions, and forms of contract therefor, and the forms of the other instruments that usually are a part of the contract.

14. Supervision. As soon as a construction contract is awarded, the architect begins supervision of the construction, erection and finishing of the project and the installation of its equipment, keeping the client apprised of the progress and condition of the work.

15. He visits the work from time to time, endeavoring to aid the contractors and obtain full performances of their contracts without delay or error. He makes the essential full-size details and approves the contractors' shop drawings submitted to him when he finds the work illustrated is in compliance with the contract.

16. If required, he will provide a clerk-of-the-works or continuous superintendence of those parts of the work that need it. Payment for such clerk or superintendence should be additional to any percentage or lump sum fee.

17. Contract Changes. If any change is found necessary in the construction work or in the time of its completion or in any other provision of any construction contract, the architect should prepare a Modification of Contract describing the change, its cost, and its effect on the time of completion of the contract and should obtain thereon the signatures of the client and the contractor affected. In such manner, the architect should keep all contracts current as to work, price, time, and conditions.

18. Certificates for Payments. The construction contracts should provide that every contractor, before any payment is made to him by the client, must obtain a certificate from the architect stating that the payment is due and its amount and present the certificate to the client for payment. The architect keeps accurate current records of all contract prices, the amounts thereof he has certificated for payment, and the balances to be certified.

19. Acceptance of Contracts. When the architect is satisfied that a contractor has fulfilled the terms of his contract, he accepts the contractor's work for the client and issues his statement to that effect, filing the statement with the client and contractor and with the sureties and insurance carriers of the work, and in the public record when that is required.

20. When all contracts for the project under the architect's supervision are accepted by him, the services normally rendered by him are completed.

ADDITIONAL SERVICES

21. Services additional to those which the architect normally renders are often performed by him for his client, for which he should charge and be paid compensation in addition to the fee for performing his Normal Architectural Services. Such additional services and compensation should be set out in the architect's contract so far as the likelihood of the services can be anticipated. Otherwise the additional compensation should be agreed with the client before the additional services are rendered.

22. The most usual of these additional services are as follows:

(a) The construction of projects often requires the services of clerks-of-the-works and every project at times needs continuous superintendence, particularly when steel or other framework or masonry, concrete or other plastic materials are being placed. To supplement his regular supervision, the architect will provide such clerks-of-the-works when required and such continuous superintendence when needed, for which he should charge and be paid therefor a stated sum or at a stated rate in addition to his regular fee.

(b) The architect or his assistants, in discharge of his duties under the contract, may be required to leave the locality of his office; in which event the architect should be reimbursed for traveling and subsistence expenses for himself and assistants. The locality of the office should be prescribed in the contract.

(c) The client may require the architect to advise regarding the purchase or installation of materials or work not designed by him; in which event the architect should charge and be paid therefor a stated amount or at a stated rate.

(d) The architect may be required to appear as expert witness or otherwise to act as the representative of the client; in which event the architect should charge and be paid therefor a stated amount or at a stated rate, proportionate to the importance of the question or work involved.

(e) The client may require the architect to design furniture, fixtures, and decorative work, each of which requires him to render services in excess of his normal services. If he performs the services, he should charge and be paid therefor a stated amount or at a stated rate.

(f) Any change in the building project after the basic drawings are approved, any delay in its completion, any change in a contract for the project, any damage to the project by the elements or other casualty, the insolvency or delinquency of any contractor or the client, will require the architect to render services additional to his normal services. In any of these events, he should charge and be paid a commensurate compensation for the additional services he is required to perform.

SPECIAL SERVICES

23. Special services in connection with associateships with other architects or members of the allied professions are often performed by architects in lieu of those described as normal or additional services.

The value of the architect's advice and counsel as consultant, supervisor or associate lies in his especial competence and experience on projects of the nature of the one under consideration. Each of them is an important and useful service, of growing importance. The compensation should be commensurate with the services performed.

B—THE ARCHITECT'S FEE

24. The architect's compensation should be adequate to recompense him profitably for rendering his best services. He who accepts lesser amounts because of the exigencies of competition or other circumstances may provide inferior services for a time but cannot continue doing so without affecting unfavorably his professional standing and that of every other architect and the profession. Architects have a service to render society that no other profession can offer.

25. The conditions of locale, site, size, occupancy, and construction are different for every building and since these conditions affect and govern the scope of the services required to be performed by the architect and the time, detail, and cost involved in performing them, only the architect directly in contact with a given project is in a position to know the conditions he must meet and the scope of services he will be required to perform and the amount it should cost him to perform them and to determine the amount of fee that will fairly compensate him for performing the services.

26. Obviously, in determining the fee the following things must be taken into consideration:

(a) The local prices affecting the architect's living expenses and the costs of performing his services;

(b) The site of the project and its contours, and its distance from the architect's office;

(c) The nature of the project, whether new construction, repairs, remodeling, furniture, fixtures, decoration, etc.;

(d) The occupancy of the building and the extent of its subdivisions and equipment;

(e) The nature and manner of the construction, whether wood, concrete, masonry or steel and whether constructed by day labor or under more than a single lump sum contract;

(f) The period over which the construction work is to extend;

(g) Unusual conditions under which the architect must perform his services;

(h) The competence and experience of the architect.

27. Because all of the foregoing things must be considered in determining the amount of each fee, it is evident that an appropriate fee in any given case could not be universally applied and that it is not possible to set up amounts in any schedule that could be proper or mandatory compensation for performing architectural services under all circumstances.

28. For the general guidance of the profession The American Institute of Architects has set up a schedule of basic fees which experience has proven to be the minimum compensation that any architect in The Institute domain, who has not especial experience or skill on the project, should charge and be paid for performing Normal Architectural Services as described in PART III-A of these Standards, under the conditions which govern the determination of the fee. Such basic fees are generally accepted by the courts as authoritative and appropriate.

29. As a guide to their members, many chapters of The Institute have developed local schedules of basic minimum fees, based on the conditions prevailing in their respective territories and on The Institute's schedule, adjusting the latter to reflect the local conditions that could not be comprehended in the nation-wide schedule.

BASIC MINIMUM FEES

30. In the schedules, the basic minimum fees are expressed as percentages of the costs of the projects, for that is the only practical way of generalizing compensations that depend on so many conditions. Each published basic fee is based on the assumptions that Normal Architectural Services are to be performed for a building project conditioned as follows:

- (a) that the project is located on an approximately level site, with no unusual site conditions;
- (b) that it has no unusual features of construction;
- (c) that it is a new structure, built of new materials;
- (d) that it is to be constructed under a single contract, for a lump sum;
- (e) that it is not to be used for residential or institutional purposes or for mixed occupancy;
- (f) that it has no unusual conditions which may prolong the period of construction beyond a normal period.

31. A proper basic minimum fee that an architect should charge and be paid for performing Normal Architectural Services described in PART III-A of these Standards under the project conditions prescribed in paragraph 30 above is 6% plus the architect's costs of providing competent heating, ventilating, mechanical and electrical engineering services.

The amount of each fee should be computed on the total cost of the completed project.

32. Those who use the published basic minimum fees should consider the assumptions made in establishing them and fully understand that every published fee is subject to adjustment in every case where the actual service or project conditions, or both, vary from the assumed ones and that no such published fee is assumed to be an adequate compensation for an architect who is especially qualified by demonstrated ability and long experience for service on any particular project.

33. If architects perform Normal Architectural Services under project conditions differing from those described in paragraph 30 above or if they perform any Additional Services or Special Services described in PART III-A of these Standards, then it is proper that they should charge and be paid a fee adjusted to the actual conditions and increased services.

34. If virtually the entire project is to be constructed under separate contracts rather than under a single contract, then the architect is required to perform the services necessary to coordinate the various trades and works at the project. Such services are additional to the Normal Architectural Services on which the basic minimum fees are based and the architect should charge and be paid additional fees for performing such additional services.

- (a) Under the conditions stated, such additional compensation normally should be not less than 4% of the total cost of the completed project.
- (b) If the mechanical and electrical works only are done under separate contracts, then the additional services are less involved and the additional 4% compensation should be computed on the amounts of the separate contracts.

35. The amount of a fee should not be reduced because of the use of any old materials, of materials furnished below market cost, of labor furnished at less than the prevailing rate, or on account of any penalties, liquidated damages, or other sums withheld temporarily or otherwise from payments to contractors.

INSTALLMENT PAYMENTS

36. During the architects' performances of their services, they should be paid installments of their fees at monthly or other regular intervals as their services progress. The installments paid to the architect should aggregate at the end of each such stage as follows:

- (a) upon completion of the Preliminary Stage, a sum equal to not less than one-twelfth of his estimated total fee;

(b) upon completion of the Basic Drawing Stage, a sum, (a)+(b), equal to not less than one-third of his estimated total fee;

(c) upon completion of the Working Drawing Stage, a sum, (a)+(b)+(c), equal to not less than three-quarters of his estimated total fee; and

(d) at the close of the Construction Stage, the balance of his total fee.

C—THE ARCHITECT'S CONTRACT

37. The architect should always have a written agreement with his client.

38. The architect's contract should set out the nature and scope of the client's project, its site and location, and the time within which it is intended to complete it; describe the services to be performed by the architect and fix the compensation to be paid therefor; fix the amount of each installment of the compensation and the time at which it is to be paid; describe the special and additional services the client may require the architect to perform and fix the additional compensation to be paid him therefor; set out the things to be done by the client; fix the conditions under which the contract may be terminated prior to the completion of the architect's services and the amount to be paid the architect on such termination; fix the conditions under which the contract may be assigned, who is to continue it in case of the death or disability of the architect, etc.

39. The architect's contract should provide that the client will pay for and furnish the architect with a complete and accurate survey of the building site, showing the grades and lines of streets, pavements and adjoining properties, the rights, restrictions, easements, boundaries and contours of the building site, and full information as to sewer, water, gas and electric services to the site.

The contract should also provide that the client will pay for soil borings or soil test pits and for chemical, mechanical, or other tests, when the architect deems such borings, pits, or tests are necessary.

40. If the project is abandoned by the client or if the architect or the client find their relationship has become incompatible, then the agreement between them very properly may be terminated.

In the event the contract is terminated or the project is suspended or abandoned temporarily, the architect should charge and be paid on account of his services amounts not less than as follows:

(a) If the program of the project has been approved and the architect has not begun the preparation of the basic drawings, he should charge and be paid an amount equal to not less than one-twelfth of his estimated total fee;

(b) If the architect has completed the basic drawings and recommendations, he should charge and be paid an amount aggregating not less than one-third of his estimated total fee;

(c) If the architect has substantially completed the working drawings and specifications, he should charge and be paid an amount aggregating not less than three-quarters of his estimated total fee;

If he has begun but has not completed the working drawings and specifications to that extent, then he should charge and be paid an aggregate amount equal to the full amount set out under (b) above plus an additional amount that will reimburse him in full for his costs and overhead expenses on the project subsequent to starting the working drawings plus an amount equal to not less than one-quarter of the said costs and expenses;

(d) If the contract is terminated or the project is suspended or abandoned, after construction work has been started but before it is substantially completed, the architect should charge and be paid his total fee, less the amount the architect estimates will be his cost of completing his services;

(e) If the contract is terminated or the project is suspended or abandoned, after the construction work is substantially completed, the architect should charge and be paid his total fee.
