←Richard Neutra's 1961 Cyclorama Building is a concrete and glass structure erected by the National Park Service on the grounds of the historic Gettysburg

Battlefield in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania to hold the Gettysburg Cyclorama painting. It was designed to view the 1883 Paul Philippoteaux cyclorama painting of the Battle of Gettysburg. Located just outside of Gettysburg on a part of the actual battlefield, it showcases the modernist style of clean lines and simple, yet striking form in the landscape. However, interior design flaws had led to the deterioration of the painting and, in the 1990s, the National Park Service commissioned a study to build a new facility. In 1998, the building's historic eligibility was confirmed by the Keeper of the National Register of Historic Places as it possesses "exceptional historic and architectural significance."^[1] However, at the apparent urging of the National Parks Service, the building was not added to the National Register of Historic Places. The new Visitor Center, located on government land that was not a significant troop position during the battle, opened to the public in the spring of 2008 and now houses the restored Cyclorama. Neutra's building is slated to be demolished and the ground and adjacent parking lots partially restored to their 1863 appearance. However, legal proceedings are underway to save the structure. Read about the efforts to save this landmark here. (look under 2010 reports)

March 31, 12-2pm. The 2010 Preservation Durham Leadership Lecture will feature preservation advocate, teacher, consultant, and author Bill Schmickle and will debut Preservation Durham's Places in Peril list. Places in Peril will cast a spotlight on important endangered buildings, neighborhoods and landscapes. Protecting these imperiled properties is at the heart of the mission of Preservation Durham. Reserve your seat for this lecture and luncheon by March 25, 2010. Location: American Tobacco Campus, Bay 7, $40 (includes lunch).

Kind regards,

George
