CONVENTION REPORT

The 1981 Convention in Minneapolis was full of pleasant surprises — not the least of which was that more than 7,000 people attended. Final registration figures could make it the largest convention in AIA history. If the recipe for a successful convention is to have the right mix of theme, issues and host chapter city, then the formula was perfect this year.

The theme, of course, was AIA President Randy Vosbeck's "A Line on Design and Energy." From the keynote speaker to the last theme session, the point was driven home: it is the design of our buildings — not the technology of energy consuming systems that will make the big difference. The International Style is fading; a new regionalism is in the forefront. (For a timely and provocative account of architecture in transition, read Tom Wolfe's "From Bauhaus to Our House" in the June and July issues of Harpers magazine.)

At the business sessions key issues were decided. A study on the advantages of mail balloting for national officers was defeated. A proposal to remove the by-law requirement that persons who are graduates of an accredited college of architecture must be employed by a registered architect or in some other circumstance recognized by licensing authorities to be eligible for associate membership was defeated. A Central New York Chapter Roofing Design Minimum Standard has been referred to the Practice Commission for review and possible inclusion in future edition of the National Roofing Contractors Association's Manual. A recommendation to NCARB to modify its recent resolution to require a professional degree in order to be eligible for NCARB certification was passed. The most controversial issue was the one submitted by the Dallas Chapter which would have expanded the Direction 80's Task Force's mission to establish fundamental goals for the Institute. The resolution was defeated but the Direction 80's Task Force will continue at full force. A by-law change which would have put associate membership representation on the Board of Directors was not supported by the Board and was tabled by the convention which had the practical effect of defeating it. The final resolution passed by the convention was submitted by Art Nelson, AIA, Saginaw Valley Chapter. It reaffirmed AIA dedication to Barrier-Free Architecture in this International Year of the Disabled as proclaimed by the United Nations. It was passed unanimously. Dave Meeker, Executive Vice President of the Institute, reported to the Convention that this will be the AIA's best year yet. The Journal, publications, documents, our professional development programs and our conventions are meeting or exceeding the goals established by the Institute's 1981 Program and Membership Services Budget. And, we can look forward to even greater improvements over the next few years.

The weather in Minneapolis was perfect and, though shuttle buses were abundant, everything was within walking distance. It was a delightful five days. The Sunday night Dodge Party held in the new Hennepin County Government Center celebrated Dodge/Sweets 75th year. It was the biggest Dodge Party of them all filling seven levels of the 24-story atrium. On Monday our three new Fellows, Paul Bowers, Dave Osler and Harold Varner, were properly invested into the College of Fellows followed by a reception and dinner in their honor. Tuesday night the AIA filled Orchestra Hall to hear the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra in a delightful Pop concert followed by dinner on the town. Wednesday night Josep Lluís Sert, FAIA, and Gold Medalist for 1981 was honored at a reception and dinner at the IDS Center. It was a magnificent conclusion to an outstanding convention. Next year? It's Honolulu in 1982!

AIA ENERGY PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

The Michigan Society of Architects will sponsor three AIA National Energy Programs this fall.

The first program, "Energy in Design: Techniques" (a Level 2 workshop), is a two-day workshop which focuses on design fundamentals, techniques and options as they relate to energy use. Energy design experts, with the assistance of a 300-page workbook, recommended reading material and case studies, will guide participants in examining energy design principles, concepts and tools. The architects will derive from the course a sound understanding of the concepts for integrating energy considerations into the building design.

The Level 2 seminar will be at the Hilton Airport Inn, Romulus. Watch for National AIA mailings. The dates are September 10-11, 1981 and the fee will be $170.00.

"Energy in Design: Applications" — this third level has two parts: a and b. Level 3a, "Energy in Design: Process," is a two-day seminar formulated to guide participants in the actual application of design techniques. With the assistance of an energy design professional, an illustrated workbook and regional case studies, participants will use the design information acquired at Level 2 to select the appropriate techniques for the architectural design process and evaluate the results. This session will be held in conjunction with the MSA Convention in Kalamazoo, October 14-15.

Energy in Design: Practice, will allow participants to actually solve a design problem. This two-day workshop will have participants in teams to examine various environmental conditions confronting the architect. The teams will then work through a detailed design problem, establishing the building's energy performance and the design strategies utilized to achieve it. This workshop will be held at the Airport Hilton Hotel, Romulus, on January 8 and 9.

The fees for Level 3a and b will be $295.00/session and will include course materials, luncheon and breaks. Watch AIA National mailings for additional information and registration forms.

AIA INDUSTRIAL ARCHITECTURE CONFERENCE TO MEET IN DETROIT

Challenges in the industrial workplace resulting from a rapidly changing technical environment will be addressed by architects, engineers and industrial leaders and managers at the First North American Conference on Industrial Architecture, sponsored by The American Institute of Architects, October 4-6, Pontchartrain Hotel, Detroit.

Principal speaker will be W. Edwards Deming, world-renowned statistical consultant and professor emeritus at the New York University business school. He is best known for his work in Japan, starting in 1950, which created a revolution in quality and economic production.

Conference participants will examine foreign competition, dropping productivity, governmental regulations and other elements in the workplace that have produced growing concern for quality of the U.S. industrial environment.

The conference will be presented by the AIA Committee on Architecture for Commerce and Industry in cooperation with Architectural Research at University of Michigan and The Society of Manufacturing Engineers. For registration fees contact AIA Professional Interest Programs (202) 626-7364. Locally contact Ted Kurz, AIA, Detroit Chapter at SH&G (313) 964-3000 or Dan Toshach, AIA, Saginaw Chapter, (517) 752-7311, both members of the committee.
