Harry Ray, AIA

2 I AM AIA LASVEGAS MEMBER SPOTLIGHT

I am a proud member of the AIA because... I believe in the power of sharing, collaborating and continual learning. The AIA, both national and my local chapters, have been my primary source for staying in close touch with the industry since 1980, when I first became a Las Vegas Chapter member. I was also a Seattle chapter member for several years, starting as the University of Washington Student President AIA representative where I enjoyed serving on the board along with several distinguished Seattle architects. Since returning to Las Vegas in 2003, I have served on the local AIA board and enjoyed the many benefits of local events and programs that the Las Vegas chapter AIA has to offer. I also believe in the strength of numbers. There are currently approximately 109,750 registered architects in the U.S. While this may seem a sizable number, it pales in comparison with doctors (1.1M in 2015), attorneys (1.34M in 2018) and engineers (1.6M in 2015). While the number alone is not all-powerful, belonging to a like-minded, purposeful, proactive group with a sizable membership (voice) can be very powerful in bringing about meaningful change, if well organized and motivated. This kind of professional representation is also a major reason I am an AIA member.

HARRY RAY, AIA

Who am I? I am a husband, son, brother, uncle, friend, colleague, novice drummer, music, food, sports and visual arts fan, and just a generally interested and naturally curious person. I arrived in Las Vegas as a 7-year-old with my family from Ohio as my father was transferred to the Nevada Test Site in 1965. As we waited for our house to be completed, we stayed at a small motel in the shadow of the unoccupied, uncompleted Landmark Hotel. In this unusual neighborhood (unlike any I ever seen before) also stood (as if waiting to launch at any second) the Las Vegas Convention Center Rotunda. These were certainly unique buildings, with their space-age motif, and may very well have had an influence on my eventual affinity for architecture.

After later securing enough drafting skills via the Phoenix Institute of Technology I returned to Las Vegas and worked for several years for architects such as Julio J. Lucchesi, Edward P. Delorenzo and JMA. With this invaluable experience, I was encouraged by true mentors, Mr. Ed DeLorenzo and Mr. Mark Sticha, to pursue a formal education. I chose the University of Washington for both the bachelor and master degrees. Maintaining a full undergraduate load while also working full-time was challenging, but an incredibly rewarding endeavor. The experience of working with Seattle architects including Arai Jackson, LMN, TRA and NBBJ on such projects as the Downtown Seattle Transit Project, the Safeco Field, SeaTac Airport and others proved to be absolutely invaluable.

Upon returning to Las Vegas I worked with firms such as Holmes Sabatini, The Richardson Partnership (currently Richardson Wetzels Architects) and Lucchesi Galati (currently LGA). I also gained a wealth of unique, full-project knowledge working for several years as project manager for the commercial development division of American Nevada Corporation.

After being back in Las Vegas for a few years I felt it was time to strike out with my own firm. My great friend, Robert Zimmer, and I established zimmerraystudios in February of 2008 located in both Las Vegas and Seattle. A small firm in two locations has certainly presented challenges at times, however the influence on the quality of our work and our thinking, directly linked to the diversity of place, has been nothing short of transformational.

On a more personal note, I am absolutely blessed with the greatest wife in the world, Lisa Ray. She has been my rock-solid partner and best friend for over 38 years. If I have achieved anything in that period it is in large part due to her amazingly unwavering support.

The most important thing I have learned in my career as an architect is the value of "Open Listening". The act of using one's ears when another is talking is only a part of what I mean by this term. Every experience, person, place and thing we encounter has the potential to add to our understanding of the world. The key ingredient to tapping into this understanding is curiosity. The point of a leaf that allows life-giving rain to "drip" so precisely; the perfection we seek in the labor of hard, purpose-driven work; the call to define and contribute to a better tomorrow, all relate to a healthy, relentless curiosity. Suspending judgment, and rather drinking in all unfiltered experience, taking time to feel and deeply understand something - this is, to my mind, the path to creating anything meaningful, including architecture.

My favorite piece of architecture? Well, that is a bit like asking, “which is your favorite chocolate in a box of a thousand?” However, I will offer the Seattle Public Library (SPL), designed by OMA/LMN, and this is why: I lived in Seattle, WA the entire time that the SPL was conceived, designed and built. I was privileged to have my friend, and current business partner, Robert Zimmer, the Design Director for LMN at the time, as a regular conduit to the fascinating daily trials and tribulations of that great project. The SPL was at the same time world renowned and locally very controversial. OMA/LMN, with this project, changed the conversation about what a full service library is in the 21st century. At first glance it may appear to be arbitrary or whimsical, but the more one understands the project the more it becomes clear that every decision, every shape, space and color, is highly rational, deeply considered and contributes to this new paradigm. This project answered the long overdue calling for the evolution of the modern central library.

What person, living or dead, would you like to talk with? Mr. Elon Musk, as he might relate to architecture. Mr. Musk is the poster-child of fearlessness. He has accomplished a great many innovations in his short life, all well known, published and important. I would like to hear what his opinion of the state of architecture and city-making would be. Are we, as architects, planners, builders, developers and owners pushing ourselves to be fearless? Can we collectively see beyond the usual monetary motivators and typical processes to create a better future vision? I think Mr. Elon Musk would certainly have some interesting, sharp and important things to say about our industry and the future of our built environment.

If I were to change one thing about the profession it would be the perception of what an architect really does - or the true “value proposition”. Throughout my entire career it has been apparent that the general public often has a difficult time understanding the full offerings of the full service architect. Many owners, developers and others align more quickly and easily with their chosen builder than their architect. I think that the AIA Public Outreach, section 4 of the Component Playbook is an excellent outline at a high and important level. As an addition to this, I envision a grass-roots, local effort throughout the U.S. to help a very diverse group of decision-makers better understand the full potential value of architects and architectural design, research and highly impactful early project decision-making. The holistic thinking of a talented, well educated and experienced architect can greatly contribute to the realization of hidden potential, when fully embraced throughout the entire process of creating our built environment. This value should be qualified, quantified and presented in a systematic way that creates an exciting, new awareness of what an architect really does.

4 AIA LAS VEGAS PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

This week, a contingent from AIA Nevada will travel to Washington D.C. for Grassroots 2019, AIA's annual leadership and legislative event. On March 6th, we will meet with our U.S. Senators and Members of Congress on Capitol Hill to discuss our support of Energy Efficiency in Buildings, School Safety, and Affordable Housing. AIA Las Vegas is engaged with policy and legislative issues on Capitol Hill, in Carson City, and locally, that impact every one of us. We will provide a full legislative update in next month's newsletter.

Our profession is very diverse and not limited to "design" which I know is difficult for some to comprehend. Many of our colleagues are working behind the scenes in non-traditional roles for the betterment of our communities, environment, and profession. Some of us even have a foot in both realms (design and community outreach, or design and sustainability, or design and policy). I like to call these folks the "game changers" as UNLV Professor Patricia Cook-Craig described during our January meeting. I was reminded this week during a Nevada Housing Coalition meeting that it truly does take a village. The newly formed Nevada Housing Coalition is an advocacy collaboration that partners the business community with affordable housing organizations. The purpose of the Coalition is to develop strategic goals to address the state's affordable housing crisis through community action and policy changes. The Coalition will be a great partner for Blueprint for Better: Explorations into Affordable Housing & Homelessness.

You might have noticed that there is national spotlight on the Affordable Housing and Homelessness crisis in America. Over the past few months, I've learned much about the issues and the many organizations working nationally, regionally, and locally on developing solutions to this expanding crisis. It has become evident that this focus will be an ongoing initiative for AIA Las Vegas as our participation is absolutely needed and is a critical component of any solution. We can get there but we can't do it alone – it will take a village. We must engage and work creatively and collaboratively with various governmental agencies, developers, bankers, social service and healthcare providers. Take a minute and imagine our city with housing for all and with no homeless. Now let's go to work.

On February 22, 2019, The American Institute of Architects announced the names of 115 new members of College of Fellows for 2019. The College of Fellows is the highest rank in the Institute's membership and is only awarded to those who have demonstrated a "standard of excellence" and have made significant contributions to the profession of architecture and society, according to the Institute. It was my honor to announce to our Board of Directors that Craig S. Galati, FAIA and Thomas J Schoeman, FAIA have both been elevated to the College of Fellows. Craig and Tom will get "F'd" (a term I learned from John Klai, FAIA) on June 7, 2019 during the A'19 Conference on Architecture, College of Fellows Investiture Ceremony held at the Smith Center for Performing Arts.

Craig Galati, FAIA hired me in 1990 to work for Lucchesi, Galati Architects where I spent 14 years as a runner, job captain, project manager, architect, owner, and past-employee. We had a great time together during those years and I just want to publicly express how proud I am of Craig, personally and professionally. I've owned my firm, NOVUS Architecture, for nine years now and can tell you that there have been MANY times when I have asked myself, "what would Craig do." There is no doubt that I am a better person and better architect because of my relationship with Craig Galati. Congratulations to you Craig!

Tom Schoeman, FAIA has never hired me, most likely because I never applied for a job with JMA Architecture (I must have been content with LGA). My relationship with Tom is not as close as it has been with Craig, but equally important. I've "known" Tom since 1990. In 1992 or 93, JMA and LGA teamed for the UNLV School of Architecture Building Design Competition – which ended up being a complete fiasco (the competition that is, not the collaborative relationship). Tom built the largest firm in the state of Nevada, has been passionately involved with the UNLV School of Architecture, and is still active in AIA Las Vegas. Congratulations to you Tom!

Over time, we all influence each other, young and old. Be your best and do your best, as know it or not, someone is looking up to you. Emerging Professionals/ Young Architect members, find a good "boss" and stay with her/him as long as you possibly can.

Assuming you are viewing this newsletter on March 1, we are only 98 days away from hosting the AIA National Conference on Architecture right here in fabulous Las Vegas. AIA NATIONAL HONORS

GALATI AND SCHOEMAN ELEVATED TO AIA FELLOWSHIP

We are proud to announce the elevation of two AIA Nevada architects to Fellowship in the American Institute of Architects College of Fellows

Craig S. Galati, FAIA
Thomas J. Schoeman, FAIA

Elevation to Fellowship is the highest honor that can be bestowed on an architect and not only recognizes the achievements of the architect as an individual but also honors a model architect who has made significant contributions to the profession of architecture and to society at large. Certainly, both Thomas J. Schoeman and Craig S. Galati each have an impressive history of dedicated service to the profession and to their communities in Las Vegas.

This year, in a field of 279 potential candidates, the College of Fellows selected only 115 to be elevated. Of the more than 95,000 members of the Institute, the College of Fellows has only recognized 3,200 since its founding in 1952. It is a most prestigious honor to be selected for this recognition. Thomas J. Schoeman, FAIA and Craig S. Galati, FAIA are two of the five residents from our Western Mountain Region six-state area to have received this honor. Others from the region are Patrick Panetta, FAIA, AIA Arizona; Tina Marie Reames, FAIA, New Mexico; Constantine Nicholas Sak, FAIA, AIA Arizona.

The official Investiture Ceremony will take place on Friday, June 7, in the Smith Center for the Performing Arts, as a part of the AIA Conference on Architecture being held here in Las Vegas at the Convention Center June 5-9, 2019.

APRIL IS ART, ARCHITECTURE & DESIGN MONTH

Art, Architecture & Design Month

The mission of Art, Architecture & Design Month is to enhance public awareness of the importance of art, architecture and design in our communities; to appreciate how these elements contribute to the beauty and livability of our city, and to celebrate the artists, architects and design professionals whose work enriches the lives of all citizens.

Throughout April... AIA Las Vegas and other design affiliated organizations will be providing programs and events to which the public is invited. We hope to encourage our fellow Las Vegans to look around and become more aware of the special features of our city and to learn more about how the architects, artists and affiliated professionals use their creative talent.

CORRECTION:

It has recently come to our attention that for the 2017 (Issue12) of our Architecture Las Vegas magazine, we overlooked providing the name of the model maker whose model provided a very dramatic photo for the cover of the magazine. The model was designed by Lan Nhu Do, a landscape architecture student at UNLV School of Architecture. The model was photographed by Aaron Mayes, and we received permission from him to use the photograph as the cover of that issue. But, since we did not know the model designer we neglected to provide credit for her. We would now like to acknowledge that the beautiful model was designed and constructed by Lan Nhu Do, and thank her for allowing us to feature it on the cover of our 2017 issue.

WELL DONE BRETT!

One of our long standing members, Brett Ewing, AIA past President of AIA Las Vegas and AIA Nevada, was invited to join UNLV's Gaming & Hospitality Education Series "The Road to 2020". Held on Feb. 21st, the event focused on technology changes impacting casino floor design. Trending issues included the impact of Esports, remote wagering and personal, hand-held devices. The industry is also analyzing how millennials want entertainment delivered and are discovering how to stay ahead of games and interaction between guests. This sounds like a topic for a future AIA Las Vegas meeting!

CONGRATULATIONS DAVID!

ENERGY EFFICIENCY & SCHOOL SAFETY

Your AIA Nevada leadership will be on Capitol Hill on March 6th, meeting with our federal representatives and asking their support for two major issues on the AIA Legislative Agenda. Energy Efficiency and School Safety.

Energy Efficiency – One of our top federal priorities is to create new tax incentives to increase the energy efficiency of existing buildings. Nearly 40 percent of all greenhouse gas emissions are produced by buildings. While we have made great strides to improve the energy efficiency of the building sector, too many existing buildings remain inefficient. However, one of the primary federal laws meant to increase energy efficiency in buildings is only impacting a small percentage of them.

Congress passed Section 179D into the Internal Revenue Code in 2005. It was crafted as the main federal tax code provision that would increase the use of energy efficient technologies in all commercial and multi-family buildings. However, 179D has been more effective in encouraging their use in new construction, less so for renovations or retrofits to existing buildings.

95 percent of existing commercial buildings are more than a decade old and were built prior to 2008. Of all commercial buildings, 82 percent were built before 2000; prior to modern versions of building energy codes governing their design and construction.

Therein lies the problem: one of the primary federal laws meant to increase energy efficiency in buildings is only impacting a small percentage of them. Furthermore the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act (H.R. 1) passed in 2017 has had the unintended consequence of disincentivizing building owners and developers to invest in property improvements that increase energy efficiency. Bottom line: increasing energy efficiency in America's existing building stock needs a fresh approach and a new public policy solution.

These new EE-QIP related jobs would include the design and construction of upgrades to the building envelope, HVAC systems, mechanical insulation, lighting, windows, roofs, sub-meters and building management systems to name some examples.

We are asking that our representatives work with their colleagues to ...

- Amend the federal tax code to better target and incentivize the use of energy efficient technologies on existing commercial and multi-family buildings.
- Specifically, expand the current definition of what is considered "qualified improvement property" or QIP, to include energy efficient technologies.
- This change would allow building owners and developers to write off a certain percentage of depreciation costs if they install energy efficient technologies such as HAC, mechanical insulation, lighting, windows, roofs, sub-meters, and other building management systems.

SCHOOL SAFETY – One of our top federal priorities is to support a design-centered approach to address school violence. In the same way that all three levels of government have made building design a central part of the solution of mitigating terrorist threats since 9/11, AIA believes the same approach can and should be taken to address school violence. Just like the threat of terrorism, school violence is a national crisis and AIA is eager to be a resource to Congress as it confronts this issue.

As architects, we are the first to say that design cannot prevent school violence. Design is part of the solution. There are school design best practices that can mitigate violence and maintain a positive learning environment for students and teachers. Security measures should be incorporated into the overall design to keep them as passive or invisible as possible to the student body. This minimizes the disruption to the learning environment while also making each security measure more difficult to circumvent. There is no single thing that all schools can do to keep students safe – and what might make sense for one school won't necessarily work for another. Architects can help by looking at the whole picture: school size and location, age of the students, campus layout, lighting, distance from the police department, lines of site, etc.

Furthermore, security measures should be layered, in keeping with the design principles of Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design (CPTED).

An important aspect of the "deter" goal of CPTED is to create a positive environment, with greater transparency and less anonymity. Fostering a healthy and emotionally supportive learning environment is, and must continue to be, the primary goal when designing a school.

We are asking that our representatives work with their colleagues to...

- AIA believes that these design decisions need to be made at the local level, but there is still a vital role the federal government can, and must, play.
- As school officials determine their appropriate response to the threat of violence, many are unfamiliar with where to begin or what sources of information they can trust.
- To support school officials in making design-centered security decisions that will maintain a positive learning environment, we urge Congress to take two important actions.
 - 1. Authorize design services to be an eligible use of funding in any existing federal grants that support school security. This will help schools to develop a comprehensive and holistic plan for their campus security needs.
 - 2. Establish a federal clearing house of resources and school design best practices for school officials to access. This will help them identify trusted and current information to best inform their decisions both before and after school violence occurs.

COTE BOOK CLUB

At our Book Club we delve into topics that are relevant to the sustainable community and select books to discuss at every meeting. You should join us to learn from the discussion, and share your thoughts on the topic even if you didn't have a chance to read it.

Our first COTE "book club" of 2019 was a success. We enjoyed wrapping up the discussion on Biophilic Design and selected the book for our next meeting on May 16th.

To start on the Climate Change theme this year we will be reading and discussing:

COTE PROJECT HIGHLIGHT

As part of our education initiatives we will highlight a project that is an example of sustainable design every month. This month's project is the Georgia Tech Engineered Biosystems Building by architects Cooper Carry and Lake Flato.

This LEED Platinum Building implements an innovative new model for research facilities by creating a system of open lab neighborhoods that foster engagement. Daylight, outdoor views, a water harvesting system, and other biophilic elements are used throughout the program to encourage interaction. Technology and intelligent design work together to create a multi-purpose open space with high levels of ecological performance.

To learn more about this amazing project follow this link:

UNLV SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE STUDENTS NEED YOUR INPUT!

Win Khine Mon, AIAS
 AIAS Events Coordinator

Interested in meeting architecture students? Don't want the hassle of long time commitments? Here are two opportunities that takes up very little of your time and allows you to get to know and guide the next generation of architects!

"Mock interviews": Help students with their interviewing skills on Tuesday, March 5th at 6:00pm. Depending on the amount of professionals that are able to attend we will be hosting 5-10 minute speed interviews for each student. Overall, an hour of your time is all that is needed. Professional feedback is Extremely valuable to the students trying to find their first job in the profession! Please contact Win Khine Mon at monwl@unlv.nevada.edu to set up the interviews!

"Coffee with an Architect": Grab coffee (or tea!) with current UNLV architecture students! The event allows for a casual interaction between the architects and the students, allowing the students to freely interact and discuss the profession with the architect and vice versa.

Please contact Win Khine Mon at monwl@unlv.nevada.edu to set up a date if you're interested!

ANNUAL GIVING PROGRAM

AIA Las Vegas has launched our annual fundraising campaign for the UNLV School of Architecture. There has never been a greater need to support the School in its efforts towards becoming a top tier university. We're calling on all AIA members to consider the importance of contributing to the School which ensures the future of the profession here in Las Vegas

Individual members are asked to make a pledge of $1,000, and Firm memberships are offered at a pledge $5,000. You can also build a stronger future of the SOA by extending your contribution into a five year pledge.

Join with the following firms and individuals who are contributing to the School of Architecture and to the future of the profession.

2019 Campaign Donations

Jon Sparer, FAIA	$ 1,000.00	per year for 5 years
Marnell Corporation	$35,000.00
LG Architects	$ 5,000.00	per year for 5 years
Gensler	$ 1,000.00
George Garlock, AIA	$ 2,500.00	per year for 5 years
KGA Architecture	$ 2,000.00	per year for 5 years
CSD Architects	$ 5,000.00
Southwick Landscape Architects	$ 2,000.00	per year for 5 years
Total as of 2/28/2019	$56,500.00

Establishing a culture of annual giving strengthens our sense of pride and connection to the university charged with educating students in the profession of architecture – the profession you've chosen.

It is essential, in our community, to support the SOA mission of excellence in architectural education. Major funding at donor recognition levels and Director requests, in support of specific initiatives like the Design Research Labs, is simply not possible without your support. INVEST IN EDUCATION AND THE PROFESSION TODAY. To learn more about the AIA Las Vegas School of Architecture and our support of the School contact Randy Lavigne, Hon. EXPLORING GEOMETRIC, ORGANIC AND OTHER RELEVANT SUBJECTS
 BY ED RIVERA

The highest compliment an Artist can receive is when a viewer says, "It spoke to me," upon viewing a particular work of art. That's what an Artist likes to hear. Because the Artist as creator, develops a language of sorts to read to. In my work, by using design, color, shape and form, I create lesson that attracts attention, like the Ying Yang, which are two opposing shapes that are in harmony.
