

Today's News - April 14, 2004

Editor's note: ANN is hitting the road today. Depending on what technology we find along the way, there may – or may not – be newsletters posted Thursday-Monday.
News: The most livable places (how does 200 inches of snow per year sound?). – Full team is in place for WTC memorial – and what can be learned from Berlin's Jewish Museum. – Two more takes on Lincoln Center re-do. – A white elephant gets a new lease on life. – A Sydney fish market with no smell...sounds a bit fishy to some. – Client "mindset" in a city in India that doesn't rely on architects and engineers: "this kind of practice is quite alarming" (one would think so, anyway). – Questions for a city planner. – Profiles of future planners. – "LA's Early Moderns" reviewed. – University open house puts spotlight on architecture and environment.
