The Journal of Design History is one of the leading journals in its field. It aims to play an active role in the development of design history by publishing new research, by providing a forum for dialogue and debate, and by addressing current issues of interest. In addition to full length articles, the Journal invites shorter case studies of objects, design typologies, and design practice, as well as reviews of specialist collections. The Journal includes a regular book review section and lists books received. It also publishes occasional reviews of resources and reports on educational initiatives.
