OCEAN HOME IS WHERE THE HEART IS

rom my earliest memories of growing up near the beach as a kid, I always knew the ocean was in my blood. As a result I've never really strayed too far from the shore, except when my addiction to skiing led me to the University of Colorado (1,000 miles away from the nearest ocean) for college. But even then, I'd make the 36-hour drive from Boulder back to the warm breezes and my beloved beaches of Cape Cod, Massachusetts, as soon as my last class was complete. It was like I was being pulled by some invisible force. And while it's been way more than a few years since college, the force that pulls me back to the ocean is as powerful today as it was back then.

In fact, it may be even more powerful now that my wife and I are lucky enough to be able to share the wonders of having a house on the ocean with our curious little five-year-old.

As you'll see in this issue, many homeowners feel the same way-nothing tops the joy of being able to share their ocean homes with family and friends.

Take the stylish Manhattan Beach home that's featured in our Shelter section (page 22). It was designed and built specifically so a close-knit family of five (with three teenagers and all of their friends) could live and enjoy the beach in style and comfort. Pretty much the same criteria applied to the Nantucket home that's featured on page 74. The design brief called for an interior that had to work for "three teenage children and a boatload of summer visitors."

And since there's nothing quite like celebrating summer on our family-friendly featured destination-Nantucket-we asked the ultimate island insider, Holly Finigan of the Nantucket blACKbook (nantucketblackbook.com), to shed some light on where to go and what to do in one of the country's most exclusive summer destinations (page 68).

Meanwhile, our painstakingly researched annual Top 10 Homes story (page 52), which celebrates the most exclusive ocean homes in the country, is way more than just a collection of the most expensive properties on the market today. Of course, they're expensive, but the properties that made our list, like the 63-acre private estate in Connecticut that has been in the same prominent family since it was built in 1902, are truly special. You'll find stunning oceanfront properties in unique areas of the country made the list as well as an additional 10 properties we've posted online.

So we hope you enjoy the beautiful homes, boats, and summer fun captured in this issue. And we hope you get a chance to relax and make memories with family and friends at your beach house this summer. If your beach house is anything like ours, the memories you'll make (like going out for ice cream in our powder blue 1967 Lincoln Continental convertible pictured above) will be priceless. Old

t a slim 33 feet wide by 105 feet long, the site in the Sand Section of Manhattan Beach in Southern California posed a dilemma: how could someone possibly build an 8,000-square-foot home there for an active family of five, including three teenagers?

There was a challenge, too, where the site faced the ocean. Nudging right up to it is The Strand, a busy public sidewalk and bike trail where thousands of joggers, walkers, and bikers pass by on a daily basis. Beyond this-across 200 feet of clean, white sand-beckons one of the most sought-after views of the Pacific Ocean.

What's a team of architects, interior designers, and landscape architects to do?

If you're Los Angeles-based KAA Design Group, you go vertical, designing a home on four levels-each coming in at about 2,000 square feet-three of them above grade and one below. And you mix up the exterior materials, using dark-stained cedar, bright white plaster, and boardTop left, the architects were inspired in part by California modernists Rudolph Schindler and Richard Neutra's work. louvers for privacy from passersby on The Strand. Tuck three bedrooms behind that and you've almost got a teenager's paradise. Add a home theater and gym to the basement level, et voilà: you've actually done it.

"They're a family with kids bringing their friends over, a big, well-connected family," says Patti Baker, KAA Design principal. "They were moving to the beach to be closer to the ocean, and wanted a family home that was not pretentious, a beautiful beach house where kids can run around."

Baker cites architectural influences such as groundbreaking California modernists Rudolph Schindler and Richard Neutra, and a trained eye will confirm that. But the firm's founding partner, Grant Kirkpatrick, says the clients themselves originated the design. "We spent a lot of time with them, so they could tell us their lifestyle story," he says. "It's not architecture-it's a process, like making a movie or finding the script."

The family's primary set today is the black-stained, cedar-clad main living space, cantilevered over the rest of the house, where their collective energy is focused on meals and entertainment. It's the home's one "rockstar moment," the clients say.

"It's almost a ship-like level above all the others," says Kirkpatrick. "It allowed us to create the best views, break the massing up, and play with natural and manmade lighting."

Interior designer Alana Homesley developed all of the kitchen, living room, and dining area cabinetry, making it floor to ceiling so the room seems as large as possible. "The great room is a cocoon of walnut cabinetry on three sides," she says. "It directs everybody's eye to why they bought the property in the first place: the Pacific Ocean."

Homesley understands the importance of interior alignments and creating spaces with focal points where the eye can rest. Not every space can be a star, she asserts. "I'm looking carefully so that everything is thought out and becomes one seamless space-the architecture, the interiors, and the landscape-so at the end you have a beautiful home where one is not stronger than the other."

Challenged by the narrowness of the lot and the rooms themselves, she sought to create spaces that appear larger than they are. "I'm always working on scale and proportion to achieve spaciousness," she says. "I don't want overflow, and I don't go overboard on embellishment or decoration."

Michael McGowan, KAA's landscape studio director, faced similar challenges, including a side yard that's five feet wide and a neighbor located just ten feet away. "You have to take the eye to the front door or somewhere else, so it doesn't go to your neighbor's property," he says. "There's a lot of screening, and moments along the journey that your eye alights onto, to pull you along to vour destination."

The home's main entry is at dead center. When the door is open, guests move into a garden area with a fountain carved from rock, tall plants that screen views of the neighbors, and natural light trickling down from upper levels. "We achieved a maximum of light by bringing it to the middle of the home," Baker says. "The plants get a dappling of natural light-there's a whole different light to the entry area that you might not get on a Strand lot like this."

Outside, McGowan found his inspiration for the home's plantings in the work of Florida landscape architect Raymond Jungles. "The primary focus was to create a color palette that's soft, calming for the owners, and that speaks to the coastal conditions," he says. "That palette is pale to medium greens, and all the flowers are a soft lavender hue."

The Manhattan Beach microclimate can be a challenging place to plant because of the wind, salt, sun, and shade from homes clustered together. McGowan mixed grasses and palms together for a tropical feel. "Along the coast, where plants get the most battering, they become less tropical, with more grasses and smallleaf plants," he says. "In protected areas where they can handle the shade, we used large-leaf tropical plants."

He aimed for plantings that were actually engaged in their environment, beyond just landscape design. "One of the best things about the ocean is the gentle breezes, so the plants that move with the breeze are beautiful and calming in your realm of vision and experience," he says.

The design team's collective efforts realized their clients' vision for the home, interpreting their story-one

Sure, the site was small.

But the designers delivered in spades, with architecture that's clean and crisp, an interior that's soft and inviting, and a landscape that pleases the eye. OlH

In a setting like this, it's only natural to be inspired by the land and sea. We took the indigenous palette of our site as an inspiration point in the selection of natural materials such as limestone, woods, leathers, and linens, and from there we embraced the strong blues of the ocean and sky through the art and accessories."

"Outdoor living in Southern California is a way of life and I often refer to these entertaining spaces as the fifth room. Porches, decks, and lanais should flow seamlessly to indoor, and the way I design and plan these spaces for clients takes as much care and thought as the entire home. Outdoor is no longer an afterthought!"

1 Cover Up

There is nothing more glamorous than a chic cabana and, if clients have the space for one. I always recommend it. No one does it better than TUUCI: they have the best colors, shapes, and sizes to fit all projects. The Grand Pacific in white is one of my favorites. It's very "Midnight at the Oasis." tuuci.com

2 Light Up the Night

Lighting is everything! I have been known to string clean globe lights around an outdoor space, but I also love real candlelight in oversized hurricanes. I love lanterns with driftwood and stainless accents; they are rustic and elegant at the same time. Napa Home & Garden has spectacular offerings in copper and bronze tones as well that play perfectly in my Park City showroom. napahomeandgarden.com

3 Warm and Cozy

I don't know about you, but nothing takes the edge off a chilly fall night quite like a fire pit and a glass of hearty red wine. Honestly, everyone is so busy these days, the idea of having to build a fire each night doesn't really excite me, so I prefer the sleek, contemporary concrete gas flame versions from All Modern. They super hip, easy to use, and with the flick of a switch, you can relax by the fire. allmodern.com

4 Lounge About

I'm ecstatic to have my new outdoor furniture collection with Castelle in the market place. The classic navy blue and white combination has the coastal look I love, and the gold finials add a bit of a regal finish to the entire collection. barclaybutera.com

5 Intimate Vibe

Styling an outdoor space should be approached just like any other room in the house, with lots of lavers and texture to warm it up and make it cozy and intimate. Outdoor pillows and rugs add texture and dimension to a conversation area. I confess I love making pillows out of my own outdoor fabric collection with Kravet. I layer the rich navy and crisp white patterns with khaki and sand tones and the vibe is perfect! barclaybutera.com

SUMMER LOVER

The Hinckley Company began building wooden lobster boats in Maine in 1928. But by 1960, Henry Hinckley was building sailboats with a relatively new material—fiberglass—that established the company as a premier American yacht builder. Their reputation for quality and innovation only intensified when Hinckley shifted course again in the early 1990s and started building powerboats.

Hinckley's "Picnic Boat" was revolutionary in that it combined the good looks and performance of a classic Maine lobster boat with modern waterjet propulsion technology. The rest, as they say, is history.

These classic New England cruisers are fast, seaworthy, and can safely operate in shallow areas. So it comes as no surprise that on most summer days, the waters off Nantucket are often teaming with Hinckley's like the Talaria 44 pictured here. hinckleysachts com

FLIGHTS OF FANCY

TRADEWIND AVIATION OFFERS LUXURY AIRBORNE SHUTTLE SERVICE TO NANTUCKET AND BEYOND

words by Shaun Tolson

or decades, Nantucket's upscale island lifestyle has beckoned the affluent to its pristine (and sometimes private) beaches and charming, luxurious resorts. (Turn to page 78 for our guide to the best resorts Nantucket has to offer.) Despite its proximity to Boston, Newport, and New York City, however, this exclusive New England island hasn't always been easy to access.

Up until the early 2000s, the most prevalent means of Nantucket-bound travel were not without their flaws. Residents and vacationers could take various ferries to and from the island, but summer traffic and slow ocean passages could make that method of travel a time consuming affair. Conversely, travelers could purchase a commercial airline ticket, but Nantucket's unpredictable weather-specifically the fast-moving fog that routinely settles over the island-often leads to delays or flight cancellations. It wasn't until 2002, when Eric and David Zipkin launched Tradewind Aviation, that travelers could easily enjoy an expedited journey to the island.

"Nantucket was and continues to be our headline destination," says Eric, president of the independent aviation company.

"We've made it a viable weekend destination for a lot of people," adds David, Tradewind vice president, who explains that because the company only operates a scheduled luxury shuttle service throughout the Northeast and the Caribbean (as well as on-demand private charters), it can delay flights to Nantucket longer than most commercial airlines or redirect them to Cape Cod for a brief layover before continuing to the island once the fog clears. "We have tricks up our sleeves to get people there in a more consistent way than airlines will."

Utilizing a fleet of Pilatus PC-12s-aircraft capable of flying 1,700 miles at 300 mph and at an altitude of 20,000 feet—Tradewind Aviation offers routine shuttle service from Boston, New York City, and White Plains, New York, to Nantucket, Martha's Vineyard, Stowe, Vermont, and other emerging Northeast destinations, including coastal Maine. Customers who reserve a seat on any of those flights, which start at $300 with no restrictions, are treated to the same type of pre-flight experiences as those who charter a private jet, including check-in times as close as 15 minutes to takeoff and no TSA security procedures.

In the Caribbean, Tradewind operates from a hub in the San Juan airport and provides travelers with use of a private lounge and also eliminates TSA screening. From there, it can shuttle its customers to Anguilla, St. Bart's, Antigua, Saint Thomas, and Nevis. "We're very different than what you'd experience with other airlines," says David, "especially down in the Caribbean."

According to Eric, the market for Tradewind Aviation depends on two factors: an affluent consumer base and a need to reach out-of-the-way destinations. In other parts of the country, he points to Aspen as a destination that will likely become more of a focal point for the company in coming years. "It's difficult to reach," he explains, "and the market would benefit from a high-end option coming from Denver or the other big airports nearby."

There are hundreds of airports within the U.S. where a good-sized jet can land, notes David, but there are thousands more that are only accessible by smaller aircraft like Tradewind's Pilatus PC-12. Montauk, New York, is an ideal example.

"In Montauk, there's a perfect little runway for us to get in," David says. "We have quite a few clients who have their own jets, but even if you own a private jet, you're not getting any closer than East Hampton. So they fly with us because they can get much closer to where they want to go."

Tradewind Aviation also owns and operates its own aircraft, which both Zipkin brothers acknowledge is a pivotal selling point for customers. "It's our pilot, our that we know a lot of our clients. They know they're not dealing with a large, multilayered organization. It's more like a family club." 0|H

PH DESIGN OF MIAMI BRINGS ITS SIGNATURE STYLE FROM THE BEACH TO A BOAT

words by Bill Springer

ybaris is one of the largest superyachts ever built by the Italian craftsmen at Perini Navi and has won multiple awards, including "Best Interior" at the Monaco Yacht Show.

But for Bill Duker, the proud owner of this 230-footlong, two-masted technological and architectural marvel, the awards the yacht might win hardly compare to the satisfaction he feels from having designed and built the ocean home of his dreams with a dream team of designers, builders, and engineers.

"The idea for this boat really began 22 years ago when my son West and I would sit in the cockpit of the 110-foot-long Palmer Johnson sailboat that we had then," Duker says. "West was six or seven at the time, and at the end of each day we would talk about where we were and also what the boat of our dreams would be like. Thinking about the design of that boat became his assignment, and then it became our dream. As time passed we started to talk to builders."

He chose Perini Navi to design and build the hull. But Duker is quick to point out that building this yacht was truly a global team effort that included his residential architects, PH Design of Miami, which had never designed a yacht interior before.

"We had a rock star team building this yacht," he says.

Top, Sybaris owner Bill Duker partnered with PH Designs of Miami to create an award-winning supervacht interior. Bottom, Sybaris under sail.

"I've done 12 projects with PH Design since 1992, when I bought my first apartment in Miami and they had just come off doing Versace's mansion on the beach. We're now the best of friends.

"They became part of the idea that we would not only bring together the 'best of breed,' which is a phrase in the contract, but would also bring together people who are extraordinarily passionate about what they were doing. And I think the results speak for themselves."

Duker continues: "We wanted to do something different, so not only did we start with architects and interior designers who had never done a boat before, but we wanted to do it with materials that weren't used before.

"We started with a conversation that went, 'What can we do that no one has ever done?' The idea was to create this razor blade that ran from the back of the boat to the front on every floor."

And nothing illustrates this idea better than the alltitanium "floating stairs" that combine razor-sharp looks with the metal's soft, inviting, and calming effect.

The second never-been-donebefore idea was the alligator "luggage" in the main saloon, which was inspired by Louis

DRIVE TO THE BEACH IN SUSTAINABLE STYLE IN THIS INNOVATIVE ELECTRIC CONCEPT CONVERTIBLE FROM BENTLEY

words by Bill Springer

he all-electric Bentley EXP 12 Speed 6e concept car that debuted earlier this year shows that the iconic British brand with a storied past is embracing the future. In fact, according to preliminary reports, this concept car represents the future of Bentley design, both inside and out.

Wolfgang Dürheimer, chairman and chief executive of Bentley Motors, explains, "The EXP 12 Speed 6e is a concept to show that Bentley is defining electric motoring in the luxury sector, with the appropriate technology, high-quality materials, and refinement levels you'd expect from a true Bentley."

The exterior body shell is pure luxury sports car design, and the rearview "wing" mirrors use cameras rather than traditional reflective glass. The interior features cutting-edge technology and unique materials as well. For example, the central console is made of a solid piece of curved glass that forms a high-definition screen for many of the car's control functions. But "luxury" is only part of the equation.

PARED DOWN

A FAMILY RETREAT ON MADAKET BEACH LOOKS TO ITS 18TH-CENTURY SHAKER ROOTS FOR DESIGN CUES.

WORDS BY J. MICHAEL WELTON // PHOTOGRAPHS BY DONNA DOTAN

on the western end of Nantucket, there's no shortage of design restrictions, to be sure. But in designing a family's summer retreat there, architect Andrew Kotchen, a partner in New York's Workshop/APD, responded deftly to them all. And he did it with style and restraint, while drawing on the island's history.

Let's start with Nantucket's Historic District Commission (HDC). On the island, every home, every landscape, and every detail of the built environment must be reviewed by this elected board of architects, builders, and preservationists. And they're picky.

"It's not a limiting board—it's just part of the process," says Kotchen, who's designed 100 homes on the island. "You have to do your homework to know what you can do in the local context. There's a mini-regional aesthetic to the island."

On Nantucket, clapboard cladding is de rigueur, window styles and sizes are prescribed by the commission, and color choices for trim tally up to a grand total of seven. "They want it to be the quaint Nantucket that it's always been," says builder Rob Reid, who's lived on the island for 35 years, working with Kotchen on 30 homes during much of that time.

For the architect, that meant research into the island's early legacy as a Quaker fishing village. The Quakers lived and worked in a series of stripped-down 18th-century fishing shacks with a look that designers today might call modern. It was a simpler form of architecture—a style that Kotchen and his firm have emulated and evolved over the years.

"I'm not sure everybody embeds all of that into their architecture," he says. "But only when you take a deeper dive do you see the details, and that's where the sweet spot is."

Doing his homework for this project paid off in spades for Kotchen. It was approved at its first and only HDC meeting, which is a rarity. Usually, as many as eight sessions are required before a home is green-lighted for construction. "This one is respectful of its context—it deals with the landscape effectively," he says. "It's a one-story home that's a series of pavilions, with only one two-story portion. When things are smaller and simpler, the board responds well."

SITE RESTRICTIONS

Even after it was approved, the architect and his landscape designer had to deal with wetlands boundaries where the 2.6-acre site meets the waters of the Atlantic Ocean. "The hardest part of the project was to work with the limited space available for development," says Miroslava Ahern of Ahern LLC / Landscape Design Studio. "A large portion of the property is protected wetlands that have to remain undisturbed."

As Ahern, Reid, and Kotchen worked to adapt the project's three buildings to the site, they also began to modify the landscape. "Placing the infrastructure on top of a rolling sand dune was a little complex," Reid says. "That was the most interesting part: integrating it into the landscape and topography."

Ahern describes the site as an undisturbed, pristine, native landscape with an amazing view of Madaket Beach, and she worked mightily to keep it as beachy as possible. "Bringing the dunes closer to the structures, as if shaped by the wind and the sea, and setting the structures within these organic forms—the goal was to have a seamless transition between the created and the natural," she says. "The entire intent was to translate the feeling of the Madaket seaside into the design."

Landscape materials and plantings were kept to a minimum, with bluestone for pavers and exposed concrete for walls. Ahern selected bayberry and beach grass for the sand dunes, using pines and hawthorns for screening. "The simple collaboration of elements helps create an elegant and unique seaside landscape." she says.

On top of challenges from the HDC, the wetlands, and the landscape, the home's orientation had to complement future construction next door. "Another, adjacent new home was to be built, so we had to make sure that it wouldn't be looking into the private pool space or impact the views," Kotchen says. "We positioned the house, guest house, and garage/cabana so that the neighboring house was never going to be in that plane."

The site absolutely drove the design, the architect says. There are views to the ocean and to a nearby pond, so every room enjoys water vistas. "That's a large part of how we oriented the home to the site; the boxes are lined up to maximize the views," he says. "We're pretty keen on that for all our projects, but this is an extremely site-specific home."

The three buildings are clad in white cedar shingles from New Brunswick and a western red cedar roof from British Columbia, Canada. They total 9,500 square feet—with seven bedrooms and eight and a half baths—and are all connected by a wooden boardwalk.

"We were limited in materials, so the question was: How to connect them?" says Kotchen. "The boardwalk is like a dock running through the landscape of dune and beach grass. We sculpted that contextual, beach-like setting."

A MODERN INTERIOR

The architect sculpted the interiors of the three pavilions too, unleashing a contemporary aesthetic. "He really embraces the modern look inside, because he's so limited with what he can do with the exteriors," Reid says. "There's a lot of hands-on creativity, rather than boilerplate—it keeps the interest up, from a contractor's standpoint."

The floors of sawn-from-beam oak, reclaimed from a barn in Maryland, were laid out to be deliberately less than perfect, with some roll to them. Countertops and floors in the kitchen and baths are a black Italian marble called Pietra Cardosa.

"The ambience and modern flair look really simple, but are actually very complex," the contractor says. "That makes it stand out for me."

From a color palette standpoint, the flooring is the dominant feature, with its gray wash standing out against white plaster walls. Living spaces feature one color accent—a teal for wallpaper, tile, and fabric—while custom-designed rugs and tables harmonize perfectly with one another. Each bedroom has its own color accent, and is numbered.

Top and middle, the landscape design features bayberry beach grass and Hawthorne trees Bottom, every room has water views.

"Restrained is absolutely the right word that we strive for," says Kotchen. "Clients don't always buy into that, but here they did. We thought about how to move the eye through the architecture in a very simplistic way."

Just as Ahern sought to reflect the site's beachiness in the landscape, Kotchen sought to bring it inside. "I love Nantucket so much, and I'm focused on making sure the outdoor conditions are woven into the house by pulling exterior colors and tones in for a very soothing environment," he says.

Kotchen's been honing his honest, pared-down aesthetic on Nantucket for the past 20 years, and he's begun to exert an influence elsewhere on the island. "I can see in others' work a shift in the past seven to 10 years," he says. "I've seen the change happen, and it's great—a lot of people are doing modern."

But in Madaket, his "seaside modern" retreat offers a touch of history too. OIH

Nantucket LICOTOS SPONSON

WORDS BY HOLLY FINIGAN OF THE NANTUCKET BLACKBOOK

"TOWN"

With no Wal-Mart, no Wendy's, and no way off the island after 10:00 p.m. (unless you have your own boat), Nantucket may seem sort of strange to the uninitiated. There aren't any stoplights, in most places you can drive on the beach (with a proper permit). And the downtown streets are "paved" with cobblestones and lined with independently owned boutiques.

For men, there is no shopping experience quite like the iconic Murray's Toggery Shop (home of the original Nantucket Reds). Meanwhile, women have lots of curated boutiques to discover, including Milly & Grace for the best hostess gifts, Blue Beetle for Nantucket bangles, and The Lovely for a dress you'll want to wear that very night.

When it comes to food, world-class dining abounds around every corner. Be sure to get a LoLa burger at LoLa 41, the wok-fried lobster at The Pearl, house-made pasta at Ventuno, and the clambake at Straight Wharf.

JETTIES

If you've got kids, then Jetties Beach just outside town is your go-to spot. It's the perfect beach for wee ones, and is also home to new hotspot Sandbar at Jetties Beach, which serves up family-friendly fare at its finest. Enjoy a big glass of frosé with your feet in the sand as your children run around on the beach in front of you. This restaurant is just as good for a morning mimosa as it is for a sunset cocktail. And take note, every August, the island's biggest fundraiser—Boston Pops on Nantucket, which raises hundreds of thousands of dollars for the island's hospital—takes place on Jetties Beach. This year's special musical guest is The Beach Boys!

MIACOMET GOLF CLUB

For those who want to switch up the sandy shores for greener pastures, the 18-hole course at Miacomet Golf Club is a Nantucket gem. This award-winning public golf course is meticulously maintained and has a classic clubhouse that doubles as a great place to get a turkey club and a cold draft of locally brewed Whale's Tale Pale Ale by Cisco. Just beyond the course is Miacomet Pond, which leads straight out to a liberating beach for those (ahem!) looking to get rid of some tan lines.

SURFSIDE

Nantucket is a biking haven, and the bike path leading out to Surfside Beach is the best route for cyclists searching for an extra workout before beach time. Along the path out to the south shore, there are three great spots for quick dining. Enjoy homemade chocolate croissants and a great latte at the new 45 Surfside Bakery & Cafe. Get your lunch at Yummy, which specializes in fresh smoothies and has a killer burger. And after you make it all the way to Surfside Beach, you'll find the Surfside Beach Shack, the island's only grab-and-go beach-front spot with some great healthy options on the menu.

CISCO BEACH

Beach. Bartlett's. Brewery. Not necessarily in that order, but those are the three B's you'll really get to know if you head out to this popular spot on the island. Cisco Beach is beloved for its surf-worthy waves, while Bartlett's Farm is ideal for the juiciest tomatoes, lush florals, and a vast selection of premade food perfect for a beach picnic.

Cisco Brewers is one of the coolest places on the island to sip and savor some Cisco brews, Triple Eight Distillery spirits, and Nantucket Vineyard wines. It has live music daily, food trucks and a raw bar set up all summer long, and there's no way you can leave without purchasing a T-shirt. The logos and super soft material will have you rocking it as your travel outfit and constant reminder of this happy place.

Clockwise from top left, Town has everything from bike rental shops to art galleries. The Boston Pops preform on Jetties Beach in August. All of Sconset's cottages are Instagram-worthy. Cisco Beach is the place to catch rays and waves.

SCONSET

The village of Sconset (which has its own zip code and is really the only other "town" on Nantucket) is literally something out of a storybook. From 300-year-old rose-covered cottages to Gatsby-esque homes on the bluff to the Instagram-worthy Front Street, this seaside destination is a timeless treasure. Make sure you take a drive out on Baxter Road and marvel at the classic ocean homes (with some of the best names!) and get your photo in front of Sankaty lighthouse—truly my favorite place on the island. If you're searching for an old-school dining spot that will tickle your floral fancy, be sure to brunch at The Chanticleer in their rose garden.

WAUWINET

Want to really get away from it all? A trip out to Wauwinet is just what the doctor ordered. Let the air out of your Jeep's tires and experience acres of carefully preserved conservation land as you gear up for the ultimate beach drive. It takes about 40 minutes over sand to reach Great Point Lighthouse, where often the only other beach companions you will find are a plethora of seals along the shore. On your drive back, stop at The Wauwinet hotel and take a step back in time. Savor it with a Painkiller (the drink), a delish lobster roll, and relax on one of their comfy lounge chairs as you watch the sun set over the ocean on the lawn (where, bonus, no phones are allowed).

MADAKET

When I say Madaket, you say sunset. Madaket! Sunset! Madaket! Sunset! This quaint fishing village on the west end of the island is home to the most delightful dusk moments and also to Madaket Millie's, an awesome Tex-Mex spot for margaritas, tacos, fresh salads, and the infamous Madaket Mystery. Millie's casual ambience and adjacent market creates an ideal setting for kicking back with family and friends on island time.

My favorite beach is also found along the Madaket shores, but alas I cannot say where. With 82 miles of coastline, Nantucket has an amazing amount of pristine beaches, but islanders tend to keep that one sneaky, secret preferred beach to themselves. Now have fun and go find your own.

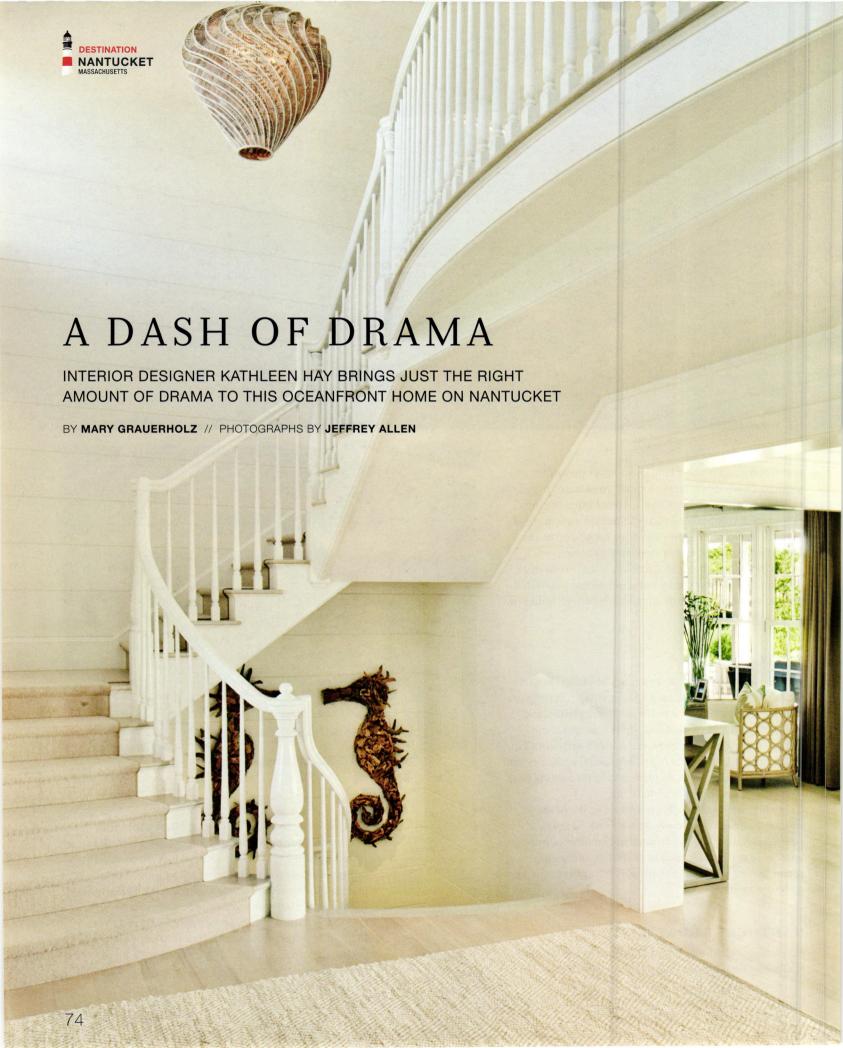

NANTUCKET BOAT BASIN

Nantucket is all about the ocean, and the view from the Nantucket Boat Basin offers a truly spectacular perspective on island life. It's a safe haven for those looking to dock before dining and drinking onshore at restaurants like Slip 14 and CRU, so be sure to stroll by during peak season to see some of the world's most prestigious yachts. It's a true visual feast. And if you want to take your maritime adventure to new heights, no one knows the harbor luxury scene quite like Nantucket Mermaids. This nautical concierge cultivates your yachting experience, from fully crewed boats to catered sunset cruises to weeklong excursions on the water. OIH

WHEN INTERIOR DESIGNER

Kathleen Hay met with the homeowners, the trio quickly discovered a singular vision for a major renovation of the couple's oceanfront home on Nantucket: bring on the sand, sea, and sky and infuse the house with nature's spectacular beauty. The transformation had to do more than just reflect the setting; it needed to do it justice with elegant, cohesive lines and—just like nature itself—flourishes of drama here and there.

"Our thought was, Let's not fight the environment; let's bring the outdoors in," says Hay, an award-winning designer and principal of Kathleen Hay Designs on Nantucket. Fulfilling that vision meant bringing in the colors of the Nantucket shoreline's incomparable natural palette: sandy beiges, ocean greens, and soft blues, presented in a fresh, unexpected way.

With three teenage children in the household and a boatload of summer visitors, the interior also needed to be easy-care and uncomplicated. As Hay says of the homeowners, "They like clean lines without a lot of fuss; they wanted a place where people can relax and not worry."

But they didn't want it to be predictable. "Moments of drama," as Hay describes her little design vignettes, were important. Today, the interior of the 10,000-square-foot classic shingled home, perched on Nantucket's western shore within earshot of the ocean, is a study in clean, easygoing elegance, with light-colored walls and floors of pickled white oak forming a perfect backdrop for dazzling motifs: small arrangements that take on the look of art.

The unexpected reveals start in the entry, furnished sparsely but dramatically. An intriguing side table, which Hay had whitewashed to resemble driftwood, is crowned with a glass top, custom made by local glass craftsman Stephen Swift. With simple metal stand-offs, the glass appears to float. A graceful stairway is offset by a light fixture, handcrafted in Thailand by a former kite maker, and on the wall, a pair of driftwood seahorses give the airy space a hint of the ocean outside.

The local vernacular shows itself in subtle ways, such as 12-inch V-bead paneling, which has been hung horizontally for a modern tweak on Nantucket tradition. Natural materials are abundant: grasscloth wall coverings and natural woven shades are among the traditional shutters. Upholstery material and treatments were carefully chosen by the woman of the house, who loves prints and, as Hay says, "has a great eye."

Everyone agreed that comfortable seating in sturdy fabric was imperative, and over-scaled chairs serve the purpose and jibe with the spacious interiors. "We kept durability in mind; we wanted to make sure it's bathing suit worthy," Hay says. "And there's nothing so edgy that it would be out of style next year."

Ahead of the foyer is a brilliantly conceived space that the homeowners call "the rehash room," which was originally designed as the dining room. Airy and light filled, it's a relaxed sitting room and the perfect setting for morning coffee or a drink before dinner without being cloistered away. There is no sofa, but club chairs upholstered in a classic Suzani fabric of vibrant outdoor colors encircle an ottoman covered in raffia. This is a place to put up your feet and have a simple chat. "People seem to prefer chairs," Hay says. "There's less of a commitment."

The adjoining living room–serene and swathed in beige and white tones—is a place for relaxation and solitude. Its centerpiece is a paneled feature wall with fireplace.

With the homeowners wanting to be outdoors whenever possible, and therefore no need for a formal dining room, Hay carved an eating area off the kitchen, near the oversized center island, to seat eight people. The table is a beauty, made by John Saladino with a top of frosted glass and a limed ash base. Above it, an eyecatching light fixture of rattan reeds resembles an urchin, another nod to the seashore.

Unless a storm is brewing, expect to find the family dining on the deck, where Hay arranged two tables of eight under a portico, with discreet heaters for fall dining. Just beyond, toward the waterfront, is a swimming pool with companion sauna. The pool is edged in sandy shades of Pennsylvania granite and fieldstone, which blend with the surrounding dunes. A separate guesthouse is nearby, and the tennis and basketball courts are tucked into a ravine to the east, where wind is minimal.

Hay worked with project architects Mickey Rowland and Ben Normand of the Nantucket residential design firm Milton Rowland & Associates and custom builder Josh Brown of J. Brown Builders on Nantucket to accommodate a large lower level with a theater, wine cellar, gym, and entertainment room, as well as a second kitchen, laundry, and bunkroom. Though it is semisubterranean, the floor was carved into the landscape, resulting in softly lit rooms. On the second floor are four bedrooms, including a lavish master suite.

Although the house is both comfortable and intriguing, friends are likely to find the homeowners outside, where gently rolling dunes sweep toward the Atlantic. And that's as it should be. After all, Hay remarks, "The landscape is the star." OIH

CELEBRATE SUMMER AT ANY OF THESE CLASSIC, QUIRKY, AND EXCLUSIVE NANTUCKET HOTELS

words by Bill Springer

THE WAUWINET

No other island reveres and revels in its history quite like Nantucket. And no other hotel on the island is quite like The Wauwinet, which has been attracting vacationers to its special stretch of sand between the Head of the Harbor and the open Atlantic since 1875.

Of course, The Wauwinet has had a few upgrades since then. But one thing hasn't changed: guests come for the lawn, the beach, the dock, the dining, and most of all to unwind away from the hustle and bustle of town.

In addition to the genuine warmth of the attentive staff, highlights from my first stay at this special hotel earlier this season include: seeing wild deer on the lawn while drinking my morning coffee on the porch, running for miles along the utterly uninhabited beach out to Great Point Light, and eating a fabulous dinner at Topper's restaurant.

There's no shortage of sailboats, bicycles, and stand-up paddleboards for those who want to get some exercise, but cruising around the harbor on the Lady Wauwinet with Captain Rob and relaxing on the lawn can be pretty transformative too. wauwinet.com

WHITE ELEPHANT

Simply put, the White Elephant hotel is a Nantucket institution. It has over 60 luxurious rooms and suites but doesn't feel big. It's close to town, has stunning views of the harbor, and its spa and the Brant Point Grill restaurant are top notch. But as I found out for myself recently, select guests also get to enjoy a unique driving experience. Thanks to a long-running partnership between Nantucket Island Resorts and BMW, select guests of the White Elephant, While Elephant Village, and the Wauwinet receive complimentary use of a brand-new BMW for the length of their stay.

The fleet of available cars includes large 7 Series sedans, hybrid X5s, and the all-electric i3. All guests at the White Elephant and White Elephant Village have access to a courtesy BMW car service for jaunts in and around town. But when it comes to classic top-down cruising out to Sconset and beyond, nothing compares to the fun of driving the 6 Series convertible in the the fleet. whiteelephanthotel.com, whiteelephantvillage.com also has a spa, café/bar, and a pool that are only open to members and guests. Situated only a mile from town, it's just close enough for guests to enjoy the shops, restaurants, and quaint cobblestone streets but far enough away to unwind in the peace and quiet of an oceanfront room. cliffsidebeach.com

GREYDON HOUSE

On an island known for its history, Greydon House stands out because it's so new...well, sort of. The original building was built for one of Nantucket's many master mariners in 1850, and the current hotel stayed true to this original aesthetic but also underwent a massive renovation that spared no expense. The result is a "new" boutique hotel offering 18 sophisticated in-town rooms and suites and a restaurant. greydonhouse.com

THE SUMMER HOUSE COTTAGES

Located in the historic village of Sconset, the timelessly elegant Summer House Cottages are almost too cute to be true. When you really need to unwind, there is nothing more soothing than the Summer Houses' simple stand-alone cottages, ocean beach, heated fresh water pool, and lively Beachside Bistro nestled into a dune just below the bluff. summerhousecottages.com

NANTUCKET HOTEL + RESORT

The Nantucket Hotel & Resort is an all-season, fullservice resort that really does have something for everyone. Of course, it offers upscale accommodations (rooms, suites, and cottages), killer spa services, two heated swimming pools (one for kids and one for laps), kid-friendly programs, and impeccable service. But it's also a prime location for weddings, meetings, and events. Meanwhile, the new "Nantucket Supper Club" held in their Grand Ballroom features a changing lineup of live bands and a three-course fine dining menu, cocktails, and dancing. thenantuckethotel.com OIH

words by Mary Grauerholz

ou're on your way to the clubhouse?" The Kiawah Island resident posed the question with the quiet exhilaration that comes with the first lustrous days of spring. "Be sure to get a whiff of the gardenias."

Later that night, my new friends at the elegant River Room bar advised that if I did nothing else, I had to experience the short rib sandwich at Voysey's, the pub in the Cassique Clubhouse.

Then there was this impeccable tip from Elliot

Hillock, Kiawah Island Club boat captain, as we cruised down the Kiawah River: "Keep your eye out for the dolphins!" Sure enough, a few leapt through the water alongside Hillock's sleek 28-foot cruiser, following the young captain like old friends.

But no one told me what to do if I saw an alligator on my way to lunch.

There it was, the day after I had escaped the blustery cold of New England, sunning on the flower-dotted lawn behind my Kiawah Island cottage. I watched as the beast gently lumbered away, toward the "Watch for Gators" sign posted next to an inlet.

All these experiences and more, bolstered by wise advice from homeowners, rippled through my sojourn to Kiawah Island, whose collection of residential communities represents a quiet pool of luxury wrapped in the natural beauty of South Carolina's Lowcountry.

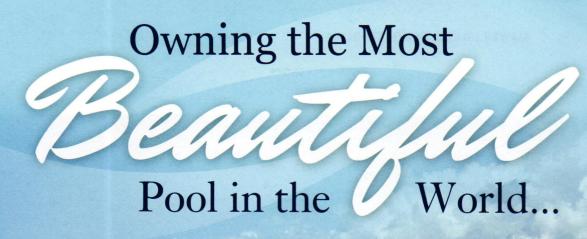

Most visitors to Kiawah Island own a home here, and it's almost always their second. Some residents and guests use home base as a launching pad for a quick getaway to sample the island's amenities and natural pleasures, while others settle in for long, lazy stays. Having a home on Kiawah means creating your own setting, agenda, and timeline at the time of year you love the most.

Often it means meeting friends for golf on an oceanside PGA course; spending a day swimming, kayaking, or river cruising with family; or just unwinding on the gracious loggia of an architectural gem of a home for a couple hours. (The spacious loggia on my Cassique neighborhood cottage-a two-story, light-filled home that is part of the private Kiawah Island Club-is perfect for a quiet respite with a glass of chilled wine.)

Each of Kiawah's many neighborhoods offers its own particular beauty and unique identity. Homeowners get a membership to the Kiawah Island Club and access to facilities for activities like boating and tennis. Other types of memberships cater to special activities, such as golf. With seven golf courses (including five open to the public), Kiawah naturally draws passionate devotees of the game.

One home in a new Kiawah enclave, Ocean Park, has a sweeping vista of the Atlantic beyond the fairways of The Ocean Course, home of the 1991 Ryder Cup and 2012 PGA Championship, described by PGA champion Rory McIlroy as "by far my favorite Pete Dye course." Another homeowner recalls Phil Mickelson's 122-yard wedge shot landing in her hot tub. For golf lovers, things are about to get even better, with The Ocean Course queuing up to host the 2021 PGA Championship.

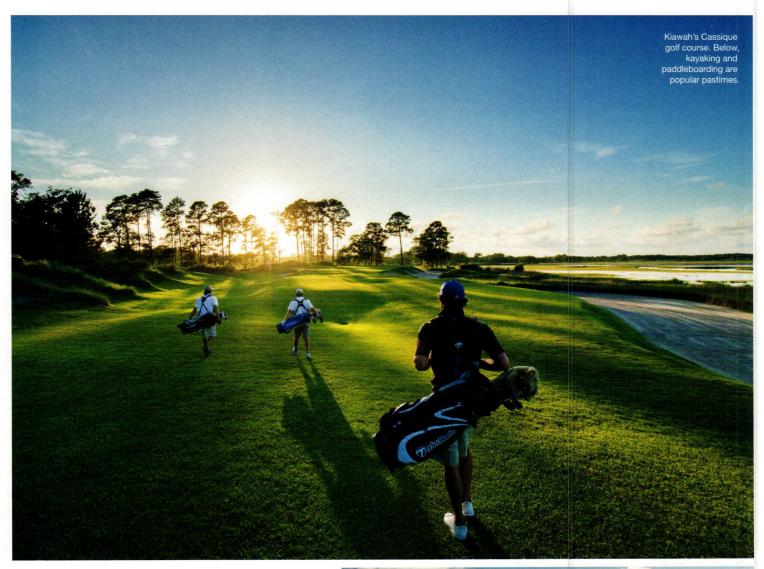

Much of Ocean Park's natural beauty is rooted in its generous open space: 90 acres of preserved, prime real estate in a spectacular setting. The number of houses is limited, giving homeowners even more privacy and a pastiche of views that includes ocean, marsh, rivers, creeks, ponds, and the golf course's rolling greens.

With award-winning architects at the helm, each of Kiawah Island's neighborhoods is a study in classic design and local artisanship, cloistered in the beauty of a natural wonderland. While home prices here can rise above $20 million, the average is $1.5 million; villas are priced $500,000 to $1 million.

The food in the club's several restaurants reflects the locavore trend, with much of the fish and crabs caught in local waters. These are not your usual menus; consider that celebrity chef Tom Colicchio, co-founder of Gramercy Tavern in New York City, is the consulting chef at Voysey's pub.

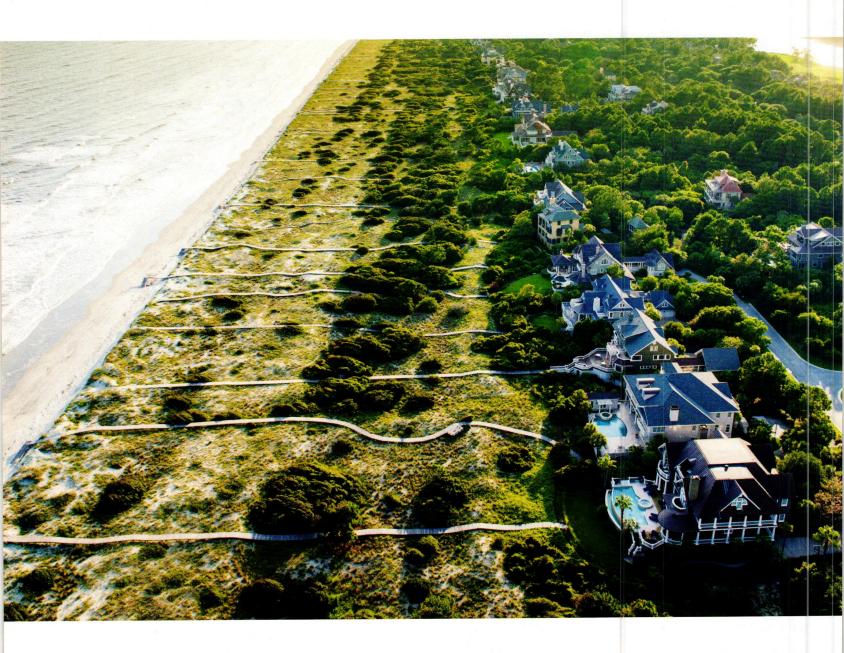

While they relax, diners can also feast on their surroundings, including the pristine architecture of the clubhouses, restaurants, and Sasanqua Spa. Settled into a cozy chair for dinner one night at the Kiawah Beach Club, I didn't look once at my phone or the magazine I'd stashed in my purse; I was too caught up in the interior of the room and the fresh crab salad in front of me. Designed by renowned architect Robert A.M. Stern, the Kiawah Beach Club's interior-with architectural detailing and a mustsee raftered ceiling-is like sculptural artwork.

There are many ways to get a taste of Kiawah's natural charm, and one of the best is exploring the island's 10 miles of coastline, marshes, and rivers with Hillock on the Kiawah Island Resort's 28-foot Scout Dorado, made in nearby Summerville, S.C.

Cruising the Kiawah River with the captain one exquisite afternoon, we saw nature at its wildest best. Under mild sunshine peeking through layered clouds, I watched Kiawah Island float by as we headed toward

THE DETAILS For more information, visit kiawahisland.com. the marsh. The colors, shapes, and muffled sounds draped over me, nudging me to forget about time for awhile and simply float, taking it all in. Hillock has sailed the river many times, and each time it's always a different experience. As he mused on that afternoon cruise, "It never gets old." OlH Homes on the Kiawah Island's south-facing beach enjoy fantastic views and cooling seabreezes.

THE NEW BEACH HOUSES BY CRANE RESORTS IN BARBADOS PROMISE A SECLUDED AND LAIDBACK ISLAND RETREAT.

words by Nancy E. Berry

hoosing a prime southeast cliff-side location in Barbados, civil engineer Donald Simpson turned a palatial ocean villa into the Crane Beach Hotel in 1887-and it quickly became a hot spot for the world's elite, including William "Buffalo Bill" Cody, who is said to have paid for his room with a pocket watch. The original 18-room building, with coral stone façade, floor-to-ceiling windows, and plantation shutters, is still in use; however, the resort has grown exponentially in its 130 years while serving its wellheeled guests.

Today, The Crane Resorts' owner Paul Doyle takes island living to a new level. He has recently begun the first phase of the Beach Houses, a luxury gated residential community offering beautifully appointed villas. (At press time, the model home was complete with ongoing work on two additional villas.)

The villas will offer panoramic vistas of the ocean and are surrounded by National Park lands-in fact, 99 percent of the East Coast of Barbados is National Park, thus offering a level of seclusion unparalleled on the island. "The location is the most sought-after on the island because the park lands will remain protected by conservation," notes Doyle. "We will build eight houses during the first phase and have a total of 63 houses upon completion."

Offered in spacious two-, three- and four-bedroom

The New Beach Houses are located just outside National Park land and offer unbostructed views of the ocean. The homes also have pools, hot tubs, and gardens arrangements, each villa evokes a relaxed island vibe with its clean architectural lines and finishes. "We wanted the spaces to be serene and comfortable," says ownership representative Mia Duguid. "The look is a contemporary beach house with environmentally sustainable materials used throughout."

For instance, eco-friendly tile floors offer the look of white-washed wood but are durable and easy to maintain, while the island's signature coral stone is used for the building envelope. Taking cues from nautical vessels, the architectural team also incorporated several built-in features for more floor space and a cleaner look.

All Beach Houses will include a large gourmet kitchen with granite island; natural travertine tile bathrooms and generous glass showers; and private patios with an infinity-edge pool, hot tub, outdoor shower, shaded outdoor dining area, and ample sun-lounging space.

Clockwise from top left, Crane Beach is one of the most popular beaches on the island. The interiors offer a modern design using sustainable materials. Homeowners are able to use all the amenities at the resort, including its six pools

"Green roofs have been installed for a more sustainable design, and much of the energy for the dwellings will be generated through solar panels," notes Duguid. "We have really blurred the lines between the interior and exterior of the building as well. Floor-toceiling windows retract into the walls to open up the bath's soaking tub to a private garden and the main living areas fully open to the patio for the ultimate in indoor/outdoor living.

"The houses will be turnkey," continues Duguid, "with 24-hour security and an ample storage area." The ultraexclusive community will offer two restaurants featuring local and international cuisine, a lounge and bar overlooking the ocean, and a state-of-the-art wellness center. Skeetes Bay Beach, a small fishing spot for islanders with a pier and fish market, is just a short distance from The Crane's Beach House community and is safe for swimming. The rugged cliffs overlooking Skeetes Bay are perfect for a day hike. Just south of the beach is a view of Culpepper Island and, a bit farther south, you will come across Ragged Point Lighthouse, which offers a spectacular lookout point.

As part of purchasing a beach house, you will have access to all the amenities of the 40-acre Crane Resort, which is just a short drive away. Much of the resort's design, including its plantation shutters and wood features, gives a nod to the original Chattel houses found on the island. The Crane is a luxurious resort with five-star cuisine in its five restaurants and café, a

The estate culminates with waves gently meeting its sandy, palm lined beach. Perhaps, St Croix's most desirable location, adjacent to the Yacht Club, its sheltered lagoon is also just opposite of the spectacular Buck Island National Park.
