

Today's News - October 14, 2002

The design for a new hospital in Bangladesh incorporates Vastu, the Hindu art of placement. – The shortlisted architects visit Ground Zero, and the ground rules are spelled out. – Bookies laid the odds on the bridge; the pundits said the same firm couldn't win the Stirling Prize twice in a row...the bookies were right (and everyone seems to have something to say.) – A smaller prize, perhaps, but not to be ignored: an award for improving public access to building sites and engaging local communities in the consultation process (what a concept!). – "Lucasland" in San Francisco's Presidio has stirred a lot of controversy; it "won't change the course of architecture...but will leave many wondering what all the fuss was about." – Frank Gehry continues to stretch the boundaries, personally and professionally - and stretches the design paradigms of educational environments. – Two out of three cheers for a new sports arena. – Teenagers and golf carts (instead of drag racing) create problems for a planned community. – Tough times for new projects in the City by the Bay. – A call for proposals to recycle a torpedo factory in Milwaukee. – A rebuttal about Pelli's library design for the naysayers in Minneapolis...and more.
