

Today's News - April 9, 2004

Architects' billings predict economy. -- Planning problems in Australia relate to government commitment as much as sustainable development rules. -- Where have all the tall buildings gone? Edifice envy in Chicago and high-rise dangers in Bangladesh. -- A sense of place in the suburban wilderness of west Dublin. -- U.S. brownfields turning green (with a British accent). -- Seattle waterfront: "a once-in-a-century opportunity." -- On-again-off-again Acropolis Museum is on again (maybe). -- An impressive advisory committee for Ground Zero museum. -- Manhattan's Skyscraper Museum with a home of its own - at last. -- Will it be the New Center for Arts and Culture or the Boston Museum Project (and one of two marquee architects) who build on a Boston greenway? -- Big plans still a go for Seattle Art Museum. -- Women in architecture: still a struggle. -- Saving treasures in California, Massachusetts, and Ireland. -- Weekend diversions: Archigram in London, and Charlotte Perriand at Princeton.
