Traditional TRIM

The best sources for period-inspired decorative moldings.

By Nancy A. Ruhling

From crowns and chair rails to full-paneled walls, decorative moldings are the architectural elements that bring a room back in time while giving it a new life.

Today, there are several companies using a combination of old-world techniques and new-century technology to recreate timeless period-style moldings that are meant to create beauty for generations to come.

DecoCraft USA, decocraftusa.com

A one-stop fabricator and installer of plaster moldings for interiors, DecoCraft USA offers a wide selection of existing and custom profiles.

Established 20 years ago, Brooklyn, New York-based DecoCraft USA is a family-owned company that has long-term partnerships with architects, designers, and contractors.

“We are distinguished by the high quality of our plaster products, our quick production time and our relationship reliability, which drive our continued commitment to excellence,” says manager Mel Klein. “And we are one of the few molding-design companies that still employ the plastering method.”

This coffered ceiling, for a ballroom, was designed by DecoCraft USA.

These living room walls and ceiling are accentuated with JP Weaver plaster and Petitsin moldings. The custom design was by JP Weaver Co.'s design department.

Elaborate plasterwork by DecoCraft USA takes a foyer back in time.

The company, which ships throughout the country, is an outgrowth of Trimworx, which installs high-end projects. “We found that many of the plaster moldings purchased from other suppliers were of inferior quality and fraught with production-time challenges,” Klein says. “To satisfy our customers, DecoCraft was formed, and now the two companies work together.”

Decorators Supply Corp.,

Using a formula for composition ornaments that dates back to the 18th-century British architect Robert Adams, Decorators Supply creates historic-style architectural and ornamental details.

Based in Chicago, the company, founded in 1883, is renowned in the industry for its history, legacy, and dedication to craft.

“We still have models and carvings that are over 100 years old,” says owner Mark Marynick. “If we can’t do it, we can find someone who can from our network of craftsmen and craftswomen.”

Decorators Supply’s products have been installed in major projects all over the country: Chicago’s Field Museum features some of the company’s original work from the 1893 World’s Fair; the first floor of the New York City department store Bergdorf Goodman is decorated with its products; and The Breakers hotel in Palm Beach, Florida, showcases its ornamentation.

In addition, the company’s products have co-starred in a variety of TV shows and movies, including “Mary Poppins,” “Home Alone,” and HBO’s “The Gilded Age.”

Decorators Supply also offers custom plaster fabrication and installation.

“We’re starting to 3D-scan our collection of 20,000 wood carvings, which will allow us to 3D-print any of our patterns in any size,” Marynick says, adding that most of these pieces are not in the company’s catalog.

Driwood Moulding Co., driwood.com

The craftsmen at Driwood Moulding Co. specialize in creating architecturally correct embossed moldings, millwork, mantelpieces, paneling, and architectural embellishments.

“For nearly a century, we’ve worked diligently to ensure that every detail we make is architecturally correct in proportion, scale, and design,” says the designer William Wood, who has been with company for more than four decades. “That level of consistency and correctness requires commitment and discipline from every one of us. In fact, it's what inspires us. So that whenever we bring our beauty, history, and artistry into a space, we know it's as perfect as we could make it."

Based in South Carolina, Driwood, a family-owned company, started out doing business in the New York area in 1940 and was bought by a customer, Charles E. Mitchell, in 1958; he was building his home and wanted ornamental moldings that weren't readily available.

Wood says he and the other craftsmen are inspired by "the love for traditional architecture, the warmth and beauty of solid-wood molding, and millwork, the skill required for such artistry, the moldings' versatility, and combinations that create virtually endless opportunities for a custom design. The clients we meet and now call our friends and their families that return to us years later also love traditional architecture and trust us to design and build a mantel, a bookcase, a room, or an entire home that they may have been dreaming of since visiting their favorite place or architectural landmark."

JP Weaver Co., JPweaver.com

Renowned internationally as the premier maker of elegant interior architectural ornament, JP Weaver Co. has been instrumental in preserving and promulgating the old-world trade secrets of manufacturing composition ornaments in the United States.

The California-based family-owned business, established in 1914, designs and manufactures custom gypsum, flexible resin, and composition ornament. Founded by Joseph Pearce Weaver, it originally produced small composition ornament, mostly for furniture and picture frames.

In 1980, after Lenna Tyler Kast became the owner, she revived the nearly lost art of producing ornate architectural molding, eventually taking on large, high-profile projects such as restoration work for the California State Capitol. It was she who created the company's signature “Petitsin” line, an ornate collection inspired by historical European ornament named in honor of her father.

JP Weaver has done projects around the world. Its ornamentation was in the 1997 blockbuster film “The Titanic” and is in several historic buildings ranging from the Grand Ballroom of Mar-A-Lago to the public rooms of The Plaza hotel in New York City.

“Sometimes I think we are all just a bunch of molding nerds,” says Senior Designer Stephanie Croce. “We all come to the business with different skills, and yet we all just simply love and appreciate the craft and history of ornamental moldings and what they can do to transform a space from ordinary to pretty extraordinary.”

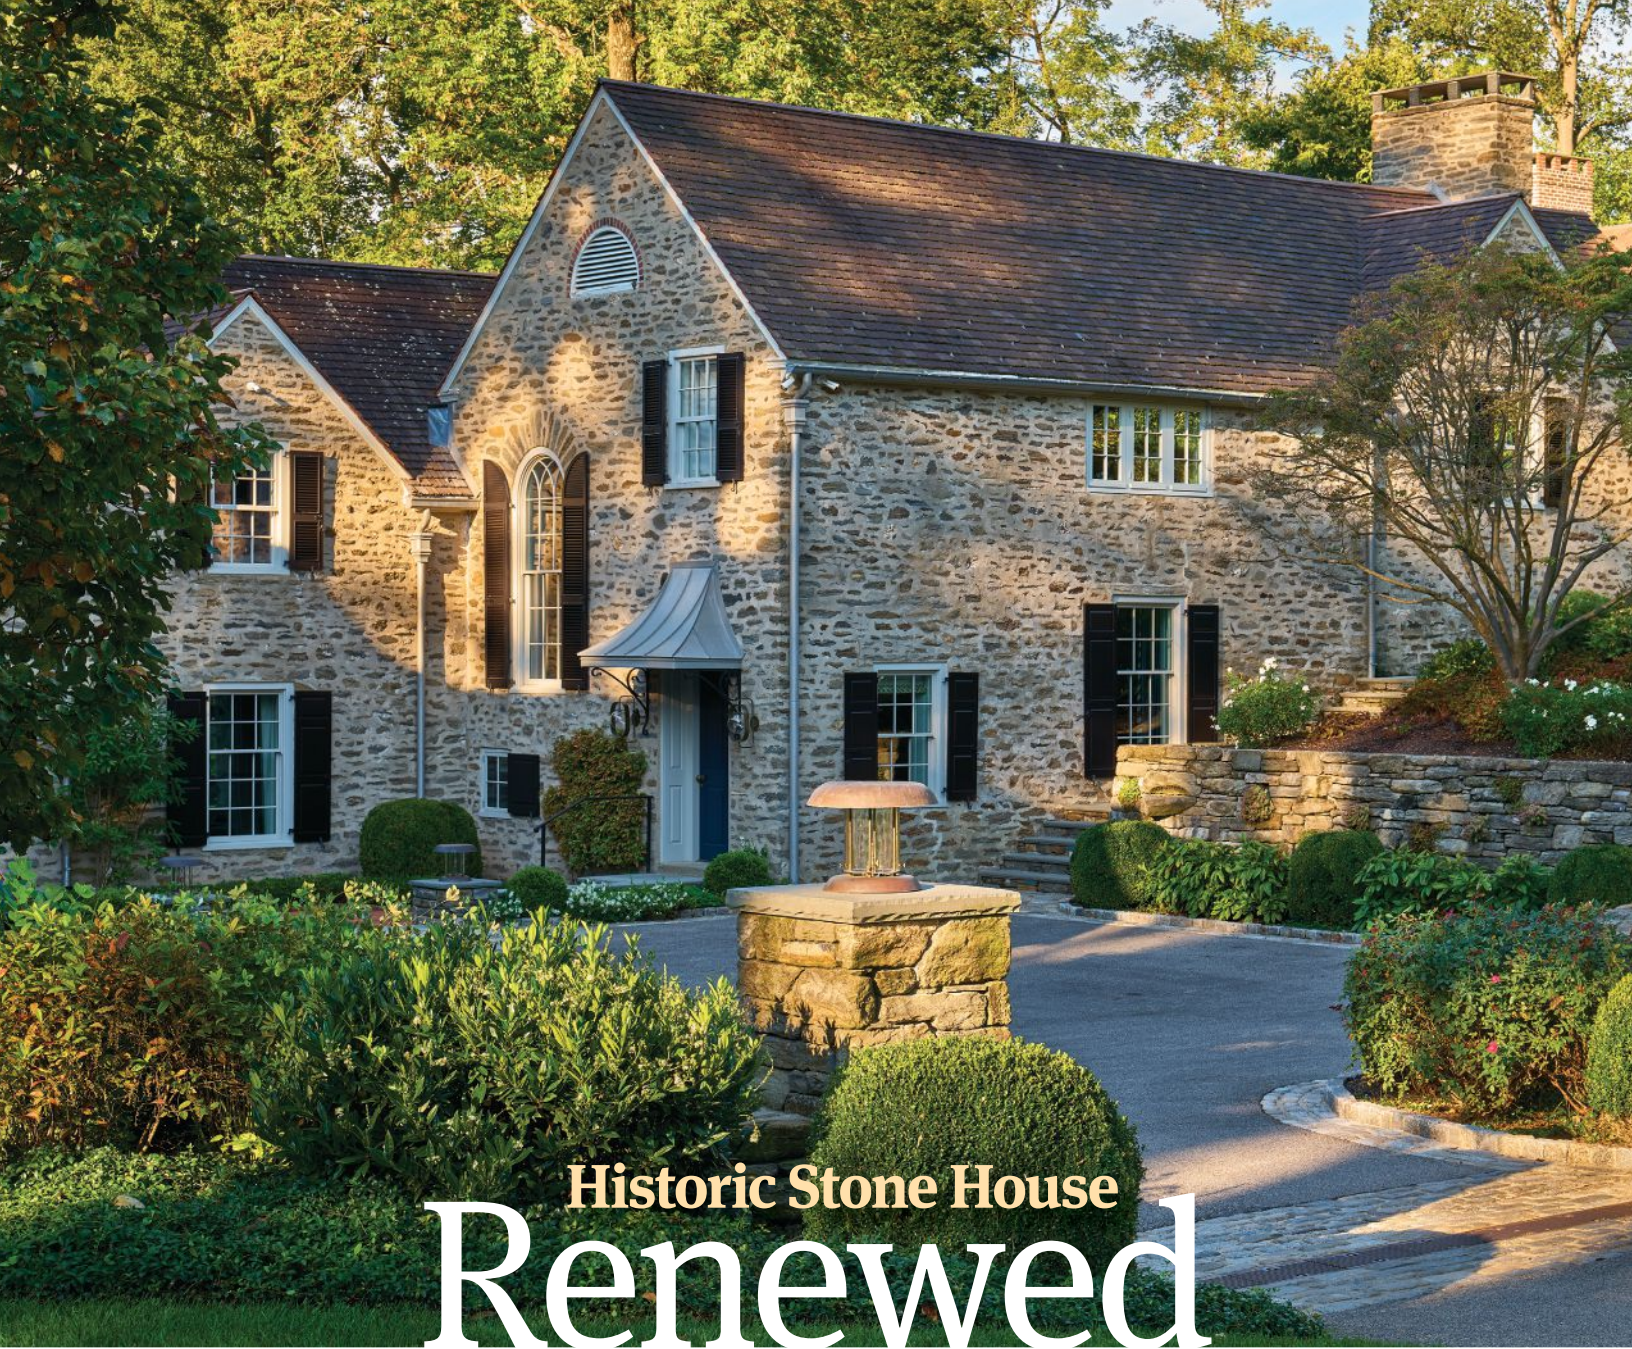

Zepsa Industries, zepsa.com

Established in 1980, Zepsa Industries engineers, fabricates, and installs custom architectural woodwork, metalwork, stairs, windows, and doors for large projects in remote locations for the elite apex of the construction market, primarily for estate residences and luxury yachts.

The family-owned company, which has 120 employees and is based in North Carolina, was founded by Ed Zepsa; it is now owned by his sons, Brian and Peter.

It started as a custom stair shop and expanded over the decades into complete interior wood finishes—cabinets, trim, paneled ceilings, fitted rooms, interior doors, decorative metalwork, and custom doors and windows.

“It's an honor to get to work with the very best and most demanding designers and contractors in the country and alongside other tradespeople who are also the best at what they do,” says President Steve Ballenger, who joined Zepsa as a helper in the rough-mill division in 1986. “This passion is elevated when a contractor, designer, or client calls us back for their next job.” PH

Historic Stone House Renewed

Peter Zimmerman restores a centuries old farmhouse in Philadelphia.

By Nancy A. Ruhling | Photography by Jeffrey Totaro

Set amid the tree-lined streets of Philadelphia's historic Chestnut Hill community, there's an exquisite old stone farmhouse sitting on a hilltop that looks as though it rests in the middle of the countryside.

Through the centuries, this 1780s home went from being a single-deep room to three small rooms to over 12,000 square feet, with a series of additions that step gracefully down the steep landscape like a waterfall.

The last stewards of this property, a family with two children, commissioned Pennsylvania-based Peter Zimmerman Architects to bring it into the 21st century.

The house, which is on a 4-acre property that includes a large pond, "had a lot of unrealized potential and was asking for a sympathetic transformation to allow it to continue its story into the next century," says Tim Lucci, RA LEED AP, a principal at Peter Zimmerman Architects.

It also needed a lot of work: It hadn't been updated in decades, and the stream that runs under the property made the basement prone to flooding.

The PZA team created a system that captures the water upstream into large underground stormwater basins and allows it to make its way naturally under the house to the springhouse. The springhouse, complete with retractable screens, was restored and turned into an outdoor pavilion.

"We wanted to create a space where one could sit for a quiet reflection to enjoy the incredible views of the surrounding landscape,” says Lucci.

This controlled flow of water is pumped, allowing it to resurface to the stream bed, into a pond, and then into the watershed. The changes, Lucci says, have brought new life back into the land: turtles, frogs, geese, and birds, in addition to foxes, have repopulated the streambed and pond areas.

The team gutted the house, turning it into a “smart” home, adding high-tech networking, lighting, temperature, privacy, and security controls, with a major commitment to making the structure energy efficient.

One of the key elements of the transformation was the rethinking and repositioning of key entry points.

“We wanted to create a more seamless transition between the interior and exterior spaces and create more distinctive entry points to allow one to experience the views of the entire site,” Lucci says.

The team focused on three areas: the front entry, the family entry, and one of the rear entrances.

In the front, the driveway was relocated to showcase the views and to allow a more gracious sequence into the forecourt, where a central medallion, framed by a custom steel drainage grate to control stormwater, creates a sense of arrival.

A sunken red-brick terrace delineates the pedestrian from the adjoining vehicle-entry sequence. The canopy over the front door was replaced with a more elegant version that adds a sense of drama and gravitas.

One of the more convenient changes was the creation of a new family entry door on the opposite side of the pedestrian court. The original stone arch was enclosed with a steel and glass door that allows access to a newly created mudroom and the garage from an interior space.

The result, Lucci says, is “purposely understated but equally inviting compared to the formal entry.”

The rear breezeway that connects the original farmhouse to a later addition has become a focal point of the estate. The space, which originally had been open, had been enclosed at some distant point in the home’s history. In its most recent incarnation, it housed an exercise room.

The PZA team opened it up with a steel-framed glass wall for a new private office and library.

“It’s one of the jewels of the property; the additional transparency of the steel and glass facade creates a stronger connection to a new playful exterior gravel courtyard,” Lucci says, adding that the original beams, which had later been painted white, were stripped to their natural color to connect the space with the past. “This created an indoor-outdoor space for living and entertaining that works both ways—when you’re in the breezeway, you still feel like you’re outside.”

Interior spaces were reconfigured to make them more amenable to modern lifestyles. A wall in the primary bedroom, which was quite spacious, was moved to create a bath and double dressing rooms; the basement, which had been used for storage, was converted into a games area, complete with a bathroom, for the children; and the kitchen, which has dual islands, was connected to the family area to establish an open-plan space that fosters communication and interaction.

“The kitchen connection was particularly challenging to accomplish,” Lucci says, “older houses kept such spaces separate by design. In this case, the area was opened to include a breakfast nook and a wet bar, features that enhance flow and visual connection for a more linked daily living.”

The interior design, by Blaine Johnson of Chicago-based JP Interiors, is centered around the wife’s extensive collection of modern art. In the living room, for instance, the custom plaster ceiling, designed by Peter Zimmerman Architects, is illuminated to highlight the artworks.

The alterations that were made “reinvigorate the farmhouse for the 21st century, preserving the landscape and its connection to the community for the next 100 years,” Lucci says. PH

Used for restoring deteriorated wood, Abatron's LiquidWood® and WoodEpoxy® are GREENGUARD certified, which means they were independently tested and found to have extremely low emissions of hazardous air pollutants.

Architectural Grille offers the choice of many types of wood when creating your grille, including cherry, oak, maple, teak, ash and poplar, all of which are available for staining, lacquering or painting.

The replication Greek Erechtheum columns at Chadsworth Cottage, near Wilmington, NC, were manufactured by Chadsworth Columns.

An elegant game room from Crown Point Cabinetry. The wood is quartersawn white oak finished with Candlelight and a Van Dyke glaze. Providence doors grace the room set into Beaded Inset face frames Decorators Supply supplied this wood vent cover.

Driwood provided the interior millwork for this new home.

Jim Illingworth Millwork created a wood door using this custom milled red oak casing door trim molding, replication of existing, project in NJ.

Vintage Millwork & Restoration builds heavy timber stairs. They use traditional mortise-and-tenon joinery to create a solid fixture that lasts, and their variety of wood species and hammered balusters ensure you can make a design statement.

This cabinet detail from a custom interior shows the skill of the artisans at Zepso.

“In the Historic District, you go with Marvin. When you go over seven feet tall, they have to be well-built, double hung windows. These windows operate seamlessly.”
