WINDOWS & DOORS

Windows and doors and interior moldings, the architectural elements that enhance the character of traditional buildings, are being produced today with a combination of new and old techniques and durable, energy-efficient materials without compromising design.

Here are some of the companies that are continuing and contributing to traditional styles.

Caoba, Architectural Windows, Doors, and Millwork, caobadoors.com

A multi-generational company that's been in business for more than four decades, Caoba crafts bespoke custom windows, doors, and architectural millwork and replicates the colors, finishes, and profiles of historic windows, doors, and millwork.

"We don't just make windows and doors—we bring visions to life through close collaboration, custom design, and attention to every detail," says Rebecca Kronick, a principal of the company, whose factory is in La Antigua, Guatemala. "We are especially proud of our expertise in restoration and landmark work, where we preserve the legacy of traditional architecture."

The company's in-house engineering team works closely with project architects, creating detailed technical drawings and specifications to ensure that each element meets aesthetic as well as functional goals.

To that end, Caoba offers impact-rated and fire-rated doors, National Fenestration Rating Council-rated products, and specialized noise-control products.

"Every detail, from the type of glass to the final finish, is tailored to the project's unique requirements," Kronick says, adding that "timeless elegance and refined craftsmanship

Established in 1947, Heartwood Fine Windows and Doors is a third-generation family-owned company that specializes in custom windows and doors made with specially selected hardwoods.

"We help clients bring their ideas to life," says Director Tim Forster. "With over 25 years of experience, there are not too many window or door types that our seasoned craftsmen have not produced in some fashion."

The company, based in Rochester, New York, is a division of Rochester Colonial Mfg. Corp. It began by making and selling storm windows, then expanded. Now, there are about 125 employees in the company's 100,000-square-foot building and four divisions: retail, pro, commercial, and luxury brands (Heartwood W&D and FoldUP® windows).

"Our craftsmen, project managers, and sales team right down to the company owners are all heavily involved in producing a spectacular finished product," Forster says.

Historic Doors, historicdoors.com

Historic Doors is an award-winning custom shop that designs and fabricates interior and exterior wood doors and traditional joinery for universities, prominent buildings, and residences around the country.

The company, based in Pennsylvania, has worked on a number of high-profile projects, including at The Plaza Hotel, Princeton University, and the University of Notre Dame.

“We engineer our doors for site-specific applications, often coordinating with tradespeople who are working on the same project,” says owner Steve Hendricks, a carpenter who took classes at the Prince’s Foundation School of Traditional Arts and received a certificate in Classical Architecture from the Institute of Classical Architecture & Art.

Hendricks, who also teaches professional workshops and college courses on traditional millwork, works with a team of longtime employees that includes his sons, Justin and Mark, who will carry the company forward.

“Through the study of traditional architecture, proportion, and quadrivial geometry, order in nature can be reflected in what is built, and can, in turn, inspire the human spirit,” he says. “Historic Doors recognizes that the sweet spot of a project is found in the harmonious union of design and craftsmanship, contributing to the timeless tradition of beauty.”

Innerglass Window Systems, stormwindows.com

Maker of the “anti-replacement window,” Innerglass Window Systems custom builds storm windows for historic renovation projects, apartments, condos, commercial buildings, and private residences.

The windows, available in low-E glass, tempered, UF 5, acrylic, and ¼-inch laminated glass, are easy to install. Most are a single unit that can be popped in and out in 10 seconds without tools and without disturbing the primary window.

“Our interior storms conform to the opening no matter how crooked,” says Kimber Degling, who, along with her husband, David, owns the Connecticut-based company that was established 34 years ago. “You can do very large windows by splitting the openings with our mullion post systems both vertically and horizontally.”

She adds that the process is so simple that the company takes mail orders from do-it-yourselfers all over the country.

Innerglass also offers operable interior double-hung storm windows and horizontal sliding storms, and surface-mount windows for French doors that outline the glass area.

“Our windows can transform your commercial or residential property’s energy usage without compromising its character,” Degling says. “You can’t see them when they are installed, so they maintain the integrity and beauty of your historic windows. And they help block noise.”

The company, which is a Certified Service-Disabled Veteran Owned Small Business, has supplied storm windows for over a dozen National Park Service properties as well as at West Point military academy and The Lyman Estate, the country manor in Waltham, Massachusetts, that serves as the headquarters of Historic New England.

Steel Window has one of the largest vintage steel inventories in the country.

The family-owned and -operated company, founded half a century ago, restores windows by hand for residential and institutional clients.

“These windows, many over a century old, were built to last,” says co-owner Tahir Hussain. “The embodied energy in their original fabrication, paired with their longevity, speaks volumes about the quality of materials and craftsmanship.”

He notes that fewer than one percent of vintage steel casement windows are beyond restoration.

Founded in 1977 in New York, Seekircher Steel Window has refurbished windows for Frank Lloyd Wright’s Fallingwater and the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York City as well as for Northwestern University in Evanston, Illinois, and Emerson College in Boston.

“We are deeply passionate about preserving vintage steel windows and doors,” Hussain says. “It’s our mission to educate homeowners, property managers, and architects on how to care for these irreplaceable features and keep them out of landfills. These windows don’t just connect us to the outside world, they connect us to the past. And they deserve to be protected.”

The company recently introduced a pivoting entry system that complements other products in its VUE Collection and is available in several panel configurations, including full-glass options with thermally broken aluminum construction.

For those seeking a premium, customized finish, the door can be specified in the Artisan Metal or Artisan Wood Collection, which features an engineered honeycomb core that combines aesthetics with structural durability. A concealed, adjustable pivot ensures smooth operation, even for oversized doors.

“Windows and doors sit at the intersection of design, performance, and innovation,” says Noziska-Grube. “I get to tell the story of how beauty meets function—how a minimalist sliding door or custom arched windows can transform a space, all while meeting demanding energy standards and structural needs.”

Wiemann Metalcraft, wmcraft.com
Wiemann Metalcraft designs and custom fabricates doors and windows in a variety of materials and is a sales representative for Crittall windows and doors from Britain in 35 U.S. states.

“We work in all glass and metal materials and finishes, and we have designed, fabricated, and installed custom glass and metal structures directly from our experience with metal doors and windows,” says President Doug Bracken, whose family bought the company in 1997.

designs and manufactures a variety of decorative and ornamental metalwork ranging from glass structures and glass railings to solid-iron and steel fencing and gates and feature lighting.

It's the combination of decorative and technical aspects of the work that continues to drive Bracken and his team.

"Not only does everything have to look great, it also has to keep the water and wind out and function beautifully," he says. "We labor over the smallest details. We are all truly dedicated to the craft of fine quality fenestration."

MOLDINGS

Driwood Moulding Co., driwood.com
With more than 500 profiles of embossed moldings, Driwood Moulding Co. designs and manufactures ornamental millwork at its South Carolina studio.

"We have a vast collection of bronze metal embossing wheels that allow us to carry unlimited combinations of cornices, casings, chair rails, and bases, and we have the ability to design and build custom millwork, including mantels, bookcases, and doors to create traditional period rooms," says Designer William Wood.

The family-owned company, which traces its roots to 1940, uses traditional machinery, skills, and craftsmanship, along with an embossing machine that was patented in 1889, to create the moldings.

"The clients we meet and now call friends and their families return to us year after year," says Wood. "They love traditional architecture as much as we do, and they trust us to design and build projects that they may enjoy and utilize for generations."

DURATION Moulding & Millwork, DURATIONmillwork.com

The largest expert miller of poly-ash in the world, DURATION Moulding & Millwork fabricates standard and semi-custom molding profiles and custom moldings and matches existing ones.

Poly-ash, a composite material that's marketed as TruExterior, looks like wood but holds paint better and will not rot, decay, cup, check, or split. It's resistant to pests, including carpenter bees and woodpeckers, it comes in long lengths that are free of finger joints and knots, and it doesn't require priming before paint is applied.

A variety of profiles can be created from it, and it can be sanded and milled and installed with common carpentry tools.

beryard Hamilton Building Supply, which just celebrated its centennial. It has been doing poly-ash milling exclusively since 2014 and recently used it on the bell tower of St. John's Church, which is across from the White House on Lafayette Square.

The Greek Revival church, which is a National Historic Landmark and is listed on the National Register of Historic Places, dates to 1816, and its bell tower was added in 1822.

"Our product met the most stringent historical architectural review board standards in the country," says Keith Coleman, president, CEO, and founder of the family-owned company that's based in New Jersey.

DURATION Moulding & Millwork, which has a library of over 600 knife profiles, doesn't require minimum orders and works with clients all over the country.

"We believe that long-lasting, high-performing millwork results in enduring beauty," Coleman says. "We know we have a product that consistently delivers in this regard, and we thrive on bringing the attributes of poly-ash to the architectural and trade communities."

Zepa Industries, zepa.com

A specialist in complete, large-scale, ultra-high-end custom millwork for residential and yacht projects from $1 million to over $10 million, Zepa Industries engineers, manufactures, and installs products that fulfill the designs of leading architects and interior designers.

"If it can be imagined, we can engineer and craft it," says Sara Cohen, the company's director of national business development. "From intricate classical profiles and replications of historic moldings and ornamental millwork to modern forms, all of our work is tailored to the vision of the architect or designer we're working with."

Pairing modern tools with traditional hand craftsmanship, Zepa makes everything from moldings to paneled rooms, cabinetry, doors, and stairs.

Zepa's custom millwork is featured in private residences around the country and in New York City's Trinity Church Wall Street, a historic Gothic Revival building.

Family-owned and -operated, Zepa works out of an 86,300-square-foot production center in North Carolina and a 12,000-square-foot satellite shop near New York City.

"We are not simply fabricators," Cohen says. "We're partners in the creative process. Our clients come to us for our ability to solve challenges, deliver under pressure, and realize the most complex designs without compromise. We build what others can't. And we do it with complete accountability, from shop drawings to white-glove installation." PH

Attention to DETAIL

*Nearly a century after it was built, a Connecticut

As soon as architects Charles Haver and Stewart Skolnick opened a potential client's email and saw the house in question, they didn't hesitate to take up the gauntlet. Just the sort of challenge they relish, their assignment involved replacing a 1970s flat-roofed addition in a 1931 Tudor Revival with a new wing that pays tribute to the original architectural design without detracting from its original spirit and character.

By Janice Randall Rohlf | Robert Benson Photography

Upon completion, the Litchfield County home won the “2023 AIA CT Alice Washburn Excellence Award” for Additions/Renovations.

While the project lay well within their scope of expertise, this commission would test Haver & Skolnick Architects’ ingenuity in some unexpected ways. Upon completion, their restoration, renovation, and expansion of the Litchfield County home won the “2023 AIA CT Alice Washburn Excellence Award” for Additions/Renovations.

The home’s original architect, Walter P. Crabtree Jr., better known for his civic buildings than residential ones, incorporated the pitched roof, mullioned windows, tower, and high chimneys that earmarked the Tudor Revival style of his time, but where he was most meticulous was in his selection and treatment of exterior materials. He specified wavy, irregular brickwork and roof slates that were intentionally cracked and slipped, which give the appearance of having been worn down over time. “The level of detail is wonderful and fascinating," Haver says. "The bricks aren't flush, necessarily, and there are different cornice details where [Crabtree] is very playful with the brick and how it's laid, as at the top of the turret. He took it beyond just the lines of a Tudor house."

Opposite page, although traditional materials were used throughout the new space, it feels more contemporary than do rooms in the original house.

Top, the new interiors feature oak ceiling beams, slate floors, and thick plaster arches. A fireplace with a herringbone pattern is found in the new space.

Duplicating this original wavy brick pattern presented a dilemma. With their builder, Chris Spiller of CDS Contracting, the architects went through three masons before finding a father-and-son team who were up to the task. "The [original] brickwork looks like a child could do it," says

The kitchen is open to the family room and features a coffered ceiling.

Spiller. “As haphazard as it looks, however, somebody took a lot of time and effort to plan all of the details.” Stepping out of their neat-row comfort zone, the masons re-created the pattern to a T.

The same high level of diligence is evident in the home’s new interiors, which reflect Crabtree’s gracious rooms featuring oak ceiling beams, slate floors, and thick plaster arches. “We wanted a dialog between something more traditional and something a little bit more contemporary,” says Skolnick.

Haver explains that one of the project’s goals was to create a great-room feeling that suits the lifestyle most people are looking for; their design also happens to suggest a Tudor great hall, albeit cozier. To allow the kitchen space to flow seamlessly into the family room, the architects replaced previous partitions with white-oak timber beams on shaped plaster brackets. Thick plaster

Tudor arches recall those constructed in 1931. “In the original house, several of the rooms had beamed ceilings, so we picked up on that theme, and in the kitchen, we took it a step further with a coffered ceiling,” says Haver. White-oak planking warms the walls of the family room, and radiant heat installed in the antique limestone floors—a junction of old and new—keep the spaces comfortably toasty.

A strong center axis that organizes the interconnecting spaces terminates in a fireplace, another Tudoresque detail, with a Cotswold limestone surround and herringbone brickwork within the firebox. Steel casement windows, also common in the Tudor vocabulary, created another challenge. “When the house was built, the windows were single-pane glass,” Skolnick explains.

“We had to find a manufacturer who could create a very thin profile into thermal-pane glass.” Tischler Windows and Doors was able to achieve this. Also, to match windows in the original house, all of the windows in the renovation have transoms, a feature that delivers the verticality common to Tudor design.

Right, the shelving at the bar sink is Calacatta Macchia Oro marble, matching the countertops in the rest of the kitchen.

Below, the stainless-steel kitchen sink is tucked into an alcove with a bank of four steel windows above, which overlook the landscape.

Above, the kitchen takes a very modern approach in the design with stainless-steel appliances, a stainless-steel island, and contemporary cabinetry with heavy door and drawer pulls. The slate floors are carried through from the family room.

Right, the windows in the new addition match the design of original windows. Just off the new space is a brick patio beyond wide French doors.

While they pulled stone floors, ceiling beams, and Tudor arches into the kitchen, the architects gave the room a very modern look that incorporates the client's preference for a stainless-steel island and complements that industrial look with brushed brass and Calacatta Macchia Oro marble. "We thought the marble worked well because the layout of the space is very composed and perfectly symmetrical. And yet this wild marble really starts to give it some life," says Haver of the heavily veined stone. "And the light fixtures over the island are all hung at different heights and very playful. We were really thinking of them more as artwork than lighting."

Skolnick adds, "When you come into the kitchen, it's obviously been redone, but it's very sympathetic to the architecture of the house, and it works with it. There's a dialog with it." Another conversation between old and new takes place in the garden room, which was created by enclosing a former porch and installing a bay window. In this intimate space, the original wavy brick walls, formerly on the exterior, become a striking interior feature.

"As architects, it's a real challenge to work on a building that was done in 1931, and now it's 2023," says Skolnick. "The world has changed, people live differently, but yet you want to be respectful of the original architecture. For us, that became the challenge, and that became the concept." PH

Tudor Tutorial

BarnesVanze Architects offers a lesson in designing a Tudor-style home.

By Mary Grauerholz | Dana Damewood Photography

Tudor-style homes have an irresistible storybook aura that has captured people for hundreds of years. In North America, the distinctive strong-as-nails style peaked in popularity in the early 1900s, but they still exist in leafy neighborhoods, their steep-roofed gables, stonework, and fine details drawing the eye.

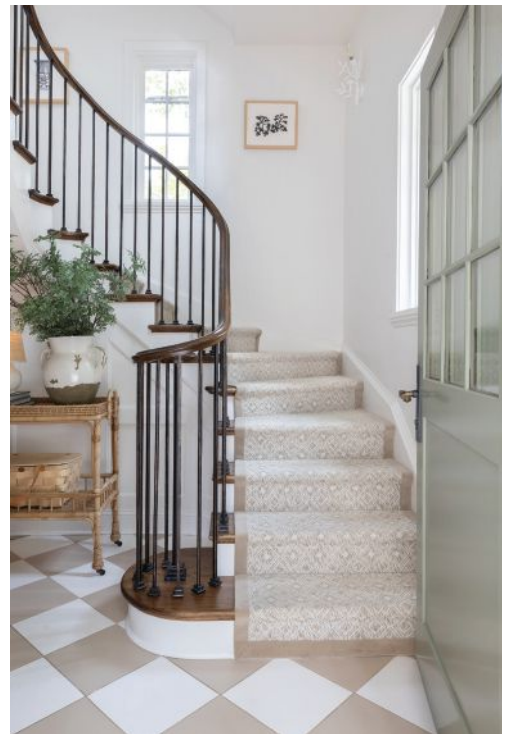

Sometimes, though, the same qualities that render great beauty can be overwhelming. Enter the fine art of creating balance.

Wayne Adams, principal at BarnesVanze Architects, Inc., in Washington DC, knew this from the moment he saw the 1925 Tudor home, located in a pastoral neighborhood near Rock Creek, which rambles through parts of our nation’s capital.

“Tudor has these special moments,” Adams says. “Sometimes, though, if you’re not careful, it can be a little heavy.” This four-story home was a key example for Adams and the design team, who embarked on the property for a third renovation. Their task: to modernize the house without disturbing its spirit. The crew also fulfilled a major wish of the young family, with three young children, who had relocated from the West Coast: tucking a new pool house on a back section of the property, with help from landscape designer Richard Arentz of Arentz Landscape Architecture.

The site, very hilly and with steep inclines toward Rock Creek Park, drew the couple, who were used to this kind of topography from their life in the west. For Adams and his team, it posed the most ambitious challenge: to show the home to its best advantage amid the dramatic landscape. Today, a lime wash on the exterior plays up the home's handsome profile, replacing the previously painted stone. Lime wash allows the walls to "breathe," so vapor can dissipate. "It's a little pricy and takes more patience, but it ended up being a lovely combination," Adams says. "The owners were lovely throughout this very complex project. They stayed true to the design."

Clockwise from above, the library, off the kitchen, transitioned to become the family room. Limestone interior trim draws attention, and scroll paneling mimics ruffled linen. A comfortable sofa and original bookcases anchor the family room. The beautifully proportioned dining room includes a credenza and more seating away from the table.

Inside, a gracious central hallway leads straight through to a view of the upper terrace. Rooms follow one to another, with the living room on the left and the dining room and family room to the right, then the kitchen. In the family room, the design team kept the limestone fireplace, adding limestone jambs, painted panels, and decorative lighting. The rooms are more compact than styles you might find in, for instance, a Beaux Arts home, Adams says. “The rooms are smaller, but still grand.”

Clockwise from above left, a butler's pantry is just off the kitchen. From the sink, parents have a view of the sport court and carriage house. In the pool house, a seating area features an old American flag. A fireplace is to the left.

Like many homeowners, the couple asked for more personalization and modern touches for their home. Upstairs are five bedrooms, each with its own bath. The children's bedrooms have reading nooks and plenty of shelving, created from the existing millwork and personalized. Special touches, such as the whimsical light fixtures in the youngsters' rooms and the roman shade over the kitchen sink, from fabric by Katie Leede, were created by the PLATT Home interior design team of Katie Jackson, principal, and Lilian Byers, project manager.

Details shine on the home's exterior, increasing the romantic tenor of Tudor style. "Details are rich," Adams says. "The way the rake enters the roof, the way brackets hold the roof, it's very crisp." French casement windows with an appealing thin profile mimic old steel window frames of the past. A stained-glass window with a diamond pattern on the front of the house, lighting an interior stairwell, and a solid-wood 12-panel front door, are also classic Tudor. As Adams says, “It is very robust.”

“The rooms are smaller, but still grand.”

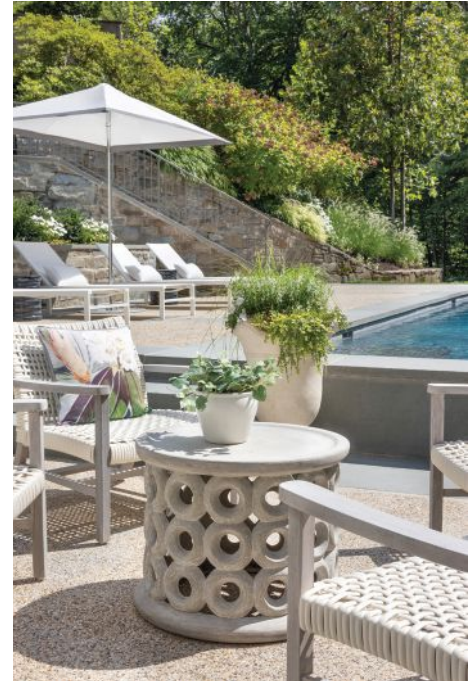

Clockwise from above left, in the daughter’s room, an artichoke light is fun and decorative. Tudor-style homes in the past often had elaborate chandeliers. The blue room is the son’s space, with lots of room for toys. A powder room is off the upstairs office. The primary suite has a cozy place for a relaxing bath. Soft blue and other subtle shades define the primary bedroom.

Most of the worktime was spent redesigning the pool area: installing the new pool, landscaping, and pool house. The three-story pool house, with a stucco finish, is extravagant in its use, equipped with a kitchenette, a sitting room, and a spa bath, plus plenty of room for changing. There is also a fireplace for wintertime coziness, complemented by the outdoor spa for cold weather. Large bi-fold doors open the pool house to the external staircase, which leads to a third-floor guest suite. (A garage is discreetly positioned on the ground floor.) A sports court with a climbing wall, in-ground trampoline, and half-basketball court are also included, keeping the children in mind.

The pool area continues BarnesVanze’s passion for texture and color. The pool house’s tall facade is finished in stucco. A zinc canopy is stunning against the stucco. As Adams says, these features “bring the scale down slightly and add depth to the facade, a detail that Richard Arentz suggested.”

As in the main house, charm is infused in the details. “Zinc has a great patina and ages well,” Adams says. “It looks good against stucco. It feels lighter and provides contrast.” PH

Doors, Windows, Shutters + Hardware

The vast inventory of hand-crafted hardware at Acorn Forged Iron includes these examples of traditionally styled gate hardware.

Arch Angle Window & Door manufactured these traditionally styled storm windows for a new project in Sylvania, OH.

Architectural Components restored the windows for the Jacob Whittemore House at the Minuteman National Historic Park in Lexington, MA.

The model 6114 pulley from Architectural Resource Center is designed for use in traditional windows.

This residence features a combination of Chadsworth's Bahama and louvered shutters.

This elegant entryway was fabricated by Drivood.

Haddonstone's portico with architectural components including columns, architrave, steps and risers creates an elegant entryway.

Historic Doors designs and fabricates custom doors and entryways for historic restoration and new construction projects.

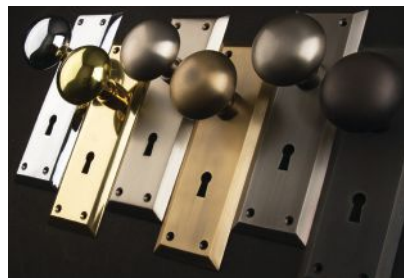

Historical Arts created this custom bronze door pull.

The Innerglass Compression Window is a vinyl framed, Glass Interior Storm Window that mounts on the inside of your primary window using Compression-Fit technology. These storm windows seal tightly, eliminating all drafts, condensation, and outside noise.

NIKO Contracting Co., Inc. fabricated and installed this custom copper radiused bay window surround.

This classic design of the New York has been popular for over a century. Its clean look is equally appropriate in a rustic bungalow, a victorian manor, or a contemporary condo. Shown here are the available finishes from Nostalgic Warehouse.

Stewart Brannen Millworks supplied the windows and doors in this Palm Beach, FL residence. Architect: Fairfax & Sammons.

Style, Craftsmanship and Dependability are the principles by which Stewart Brannen Millwork has gained our reputation. Since our inception, we have been dedicated to providing our clients with some of the world's finest examples of wooden fenestration and custom millwork. Lewis Stewart and Edmund Brannen co-founded the company in 1989 and grew it in a small town in Southeast Georgia. The company, now a quarter century old, is still tied to its small-town roots and values.

Stewart Brannen's dedicated design team works with our clients to develop functional, one-of-a-kind works of art in the form of windows, doors and custom millwork, including hurricane and impact-resistant windows and doors. Family owned and operated, all projects receive personalized attention and are manufactured on-site. By combining time-tested design aspects with today's cutting-edge technology and manufacturing processes, Stewart Brannen's product line is unparalleled. We offer world-class, American made products that fit a domestic budget.
