When a Hobby Becomes a Delightful Necessity

WHAT of those who are more and more seeking the secluded spots of mountain and seaside for both their summer and all year around homes?

How can they in the short season locations, have their own outside flowers and vegetables, unless the plants be given a running start in a greenhouse?

A greenhouse in a mountain camp, you say,—who ever heard of such?

Well, Ex-President Coolidge spent one of his summers in the Adirondack camp of Irwin R. Kirkwood, at Lake Osgood, where one of our greenhouses each year plays a decidedly important part.

This one shown, is 18 feet wide and 33 feet long. It's our Master Construction iron frame. All the wood used is cypress. None other is employed in any of our houses.

There's a new greenhouse and conservatory catalog just from the press. Also one on glassed-over swimming pools. Shall we send you both?
